A NEW DISPENSATION.

"BROADBRIM" DWELLS ON A MARVELLOUS SPIRITUAL IMPETUS.

The Status of Women in the Churches—A Change That Must Make Old Primitive Methodists Turn Over in Their Graves—Bitter Political Fight.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—"De sun do move," said Brother Jasper; "Yes, sah, de sun do move, shua; dar ain't no mistake 'bout dat." And he was right, for it would seem as if the earth had increased her velocity a hundredfold, as with a magnificent burst of speed like that of a kingly racer rearing the goal, she springs into the splendid light of this new dispensation.

What is the meaning of this sudden impetus which has been given to the spiritual activities of the time? Is this new revelation due to that mighty convocation in the city of Chicago lately, where the followers of Buddha and Vishnu and Confucius and Mohammed met the chosen children of the Almighty and the disciples of Jesus Christ?—and, urged by a common impulse, resistless as the wild sweep of Niagara's tremendous flood, all joined in the swelling chorus, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow!"

The like of this spiritual congress hath not been seen before since creation's dawn, and the archangel's trumpet may sound, calling the quick and the dead to judgment, before the world may look upon its like again. It was marvelous, simply marvelous. Here on the same platform, friends and brothers for the time, stood the mitred princes of imperial Rome, robed in that magnificent vesture which has claimed the awe and admiration of its followers through the centuries, and the trim but ignorant soldier of the Salvation army, whose tamborine and bones called harlots and drunkards, and thieves, and murderers from the drinking and gambling hells of the byways and the slums to wash and be clean in Siloam's pool, and when purified and redeemed to serve evermore as valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord.

The Brahmin lost no caste in that mighty assembly as he rehearsed the romantic legend of Buddha's birth, life and miraculous transfiguration; part of the story might have been a rehearsal of annunciation to the Virgin mother, or of the Immaculate Conception, as told by the christian evangelists.

These Hindoos represented a faith held by hundreds of millions at the present time, and of hundreds of thousands of millions in the ages that have gone, and with them was the accumulated wisdom of all time.

The Mohammedan spoke of the prophet and his disciples, and as an example of piety and self-sacrifice pointed to Omar, who, every day of his long and busy life, not only led the prophet's followers to the most glorious victories, but he also found time each day to earn in a humble occupation the poor food that he ate and the scant raiment that covered him, and whose splendid mausoleum crowns the summit of Mount Moriah, above the ruins of Solomon's magnificent temple.

The effect of this religious congress is being manifested in many ways, and nowhere more palpably than in the status of women in the church. The Catholic church for hundreds of years has recognized her position and usefulness—almost as many women as men having received the canonization, and unto her care has been given the wretched fatherless and motherless homeless waifs—the flotsam and jetsam of misfortune and crime.

Here was where the church of Rome had one of its most powerful allies. The foundation stones of the structure that they reared were laid with the holy cement of charity; they cast their bread upon the waters and it returned after many days.

Europe was swarming with Catholic sisterhoods, and held in their control half the hospitals and charitable institutions in the land before the Protestant churches awakened to the fact of woman's power and usefulness in that direction. Then came the institution of the order of Episcopal sisters or deaconesses, almost identical with the Catholic sisters of mercy and charity. This order is now established in every portion of our country, and following them is a train of benediction.

But the most radical change of all is that which has taken place in the staid old Methodist church—a change that would have made those fine old primitive Methodists, John and Charley Wesley, turn over in their graves.

For some time past a house has been maintained at 241 West Fourteenth street as a home for the Methodist order of deaconesses, of which there are at the present time twenty-eight in New York. The house has been supported mainly by the congregation which has been identified with what has been known as the forward movement, of which the Rev. Mr. Yateman has been the recognized leader. The services are conducted at the academy of music. Here, Patti the divine, warbled those golden notes worth five thousand dollars a night. Here, Denman Thompson delighted hundreds of thousands of people with his quaint old Joshua Whitcomb in the Old Homestead. Here, the Black Crook flourished and the imperial Cushman rendered Shakespeare, and it has been no stranger to the manly art. But no congregation assembled there ever saw a stranger spectacle than that assembled there a week ago last Sabbath.

The house was well filled and there were many on the stage to witness the offer of twenty-eight young women who were to be sold at auction. The maximum price on each of these fair damsels was fixed at two hundred and fifty dollars; a very engaging and handsome lot they were, who looked as if they would be dog cheap at a hundred thousand dollars apiece. Mrs. Meyer, of Chicago, the founder of the order of Methodist deaconesses, was there, as was also Sister Dora, of London, whose name is Stephenson. Mr. Yateman opened his plan as follows: "It takes seven thousand dollars to support twenty-eight deaconesses, or two hundred and fifty dollars each. Now, what I propose to do is to auction off the right to support one of the deaconesses for one year; now, who will take one?" A fat man in the gallery roared out, "I'll take two." "Good, brother, good," came from all parts of the house. "Give me a half one," squeaked out a little man down by the orchestra,—"and I'll take the other half," shouted a man in the middle of the house with a voice like a bassoon. "A quarter for me," cried a man in the gallery, and his neighbor roared out, "I'll take the other quarter," then another said he would take the remaining half, and so the bidding went on till nearly the whole lot was disposed of. Then a sweet-looking sister went down among the audience with a basket and some envelopes. Mr. Yateman told her before she started to look right in the men's eyes. If she had done so there who would not have been a man in the audience who would have had car fare left to carry him back home. But she had mercy on them and only looked out of the corner of her eye, but when she reached the stage she was sold three times over. It was a success, an immense success, and Brother Yateman may congratulate himself that he has added a fresh impulse to the forward movement. I don't know that his methods are likely to become fashionable, but there is no question that the auction, spiritual or temporal, is an excellent institution when you want to get rid of job lots.

One of the bitterest political fights that has taken place for years is now being fought in Brooklyn for the control of her municipal government. The pearl of great price that both parties are contending for is the office of mayor, who has supreme control over all the appointive offices in the city. He appoints who he pleases, and he is accountable to no one but the people.

It has been notorious for years that by some means, nobody exactly knows why, the government of the city has been ruled by a mercenary ring, at the head of which is a man named McLaughlin, who represents in Brooklyn a power as absolute as the czar does in the city of St. Petersburg. Of late years the corruption of the city government has become so notorious that the people at last have risen against the ringsters. The flagrant robbery of the city has become appalling, and the issue is which party shall have complete control. But the parties are not divided by mere political lines, the difference being that one of them is under the control of the ring and the other is not. The fight is waged with the bitterness of an old-time Indian warfare, where it was war to the knife and the knife to the hilt. Everybody appears to be canvassing for one side or the other; families have been separated and the friendship of years has been broken up. I have seldom seen greater excitement in a presidential election, and the best citizens are hoping for the overthrow of the ring.

Whether it is that the hard times are leading men seriously to reflect upon their spiritual possibilities in the other world, I know not; but certain it is that while the theatres, with some very few exceptions, have been doing a losing business, the churches are beginning to pull up; and I know several right in the fashionable quarter where, a year ago, not half the pews were occupied, at the present time the pews are not only filled, but the aisles are crowded with repentant sinners, and for all late comers there is standing room only.

Apropos of the theatres: You will recollect that a week or so ago I spoke of the latest English sensation produced at the Star by the Kendalls, entitled "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." The press without a single exception jumped on it with both feet; they denounced the piece as an abomination and pitched into Mrs. Kendall for appearing in it. Now, Mrs. Kendall has not lived her forty-five years for nothing; she can be as mild as a summer zephyr when the sky is clear, but she has no more fear of a cyclonic breeze than the Valkyrie had; in fact I think she sails best in heavy weather. The question turned on this point—not did she act the part well, about that there was no question—but was the part a nice one for Mrs. Kendall to act?

As I said the critics sailed into her and they got her British blood up. She comes of fighting stock. Tom Robertson had a chance to exhibit his muscle in his day. Then Mrs. Kendall sailed into the critics and she gave them Hail Columbia. Well, the aftermath of the row was that the great public all wanted to see just how wicked "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" was. It is safe to say that fully three-fifths of the house were women. All the best seats in the house have been engaged several days ahead, and on Saturday last the matinee and evening yielded over three thousand dollars. No other theatre in New York could show such a result, and the conclusion is forced upon me that a little wholesome spice of devilitry in our amusements makes them more popular and marketable. It is like the gamy flavor of venison, which would delight the palate of a gormand, but which to an uncultivated taste would make a horse leave his oats.—BROADBRIM.

SAVE THE BABIES!

Too Many Deaths!

Mothers Responsible!

Better Food Wanted!

WHAT SCIENCE HAS DONE TO SAVE BABY LIFE!

The press and thinking people of Canada continually cry out on behalf of "baby life." Too many deaths occur from day to day owing to the carelessness of mothers in the matter of feeding. Baby life with its weak digestive powers and undeveloped organs requires a food as near mother's milk as it can be made. Science has given lactated food to the world, for the sustenance and preservation of little ones. This lactated food is easily assimilated; it never irritates the stomach and bowels; it is a health giver and producer of fat, bone and muscle. Lactated food saves from diarrhœa and dysentery, and has the grandest record as a saver of infant life. Mothers, who have given this food one trial, never use any other. If baby is not doing well, we say, try lactated food, the mother's friend and infant's health-giver.

THE DISINHERITED.

The Prodigal Son of a Millionaire Ex-Senator Creates a New Sensation.

Charles L. Fair, the only surviving son of ex-Senator Fair of Nevada, has made a reputation for himself as the fastest of the fast young men of San Francisco and is not entirely unknown in Chicago, New York, Paris, London and various other cities whither he has journeyed in search of pleasure and excitement. His relatives and friends long ago ceased to manifest surprise at his escapades, and it seemed doubtful if there was anything he had left undone that could cause them new astonishment.

CHARLES L. FAIR.

His recent marriage, however, capped the climax of his wild career and created a sensation that made his former doings seem tame indeed. His father at once declared that he would have nothing further to do with his son and emphasized his displeasure by adding a codicil to his will cutting the young man off with a legacy of $100 and giving his reasons therefor. As the ex-senator is worth nearly $50,000,000 and has but three children to divide his wealth among, it would seem at the lowest estimate that his father's displeasure has probably cost young Fair at least $15,000,000.

He will not be left penniless, however, for under the will of his mother, who died several years ago, he will come into the possession of $1,000,000 when he reaches the age of 30 years, and in the meantime he has an income of $1,000 a month. He is now only 27 years of age, and it is said has several times tried to anticipate his inheritance from his mother's estate by selling out at a large discount.

The young man's wedding was decidedly informal. He and his bride crossed the bay from San Francisco to Oakland, procured a license and were married in the presence of only the two witnesses required by law, one of whom was the driver of the hack in which they rode and the other the clergyman's daughter. After the ceremony was over the young couple drove to a restaurant and drank a single bottle of beer, and then went back to San Francisco and began preparations for a trip to Paris, for which city they are now on the way.

THE BRIDE.

The bride is a big handsome woman of 30 years and is very well known in several of the great cities. She was born in New Jersey, and her name is Caroline D. Smith, but she has been at various times known as Maude Nelson, Maude Thomas, Maude Ullman and under several other aliases. She was best known in California as Maude Nelson.

Guarding Against Train Robbers.

A strange sight in these days of peace is that witnessed on the Pullman trains east of west from Waterville, Me., says the Lewiston Journal. When the train comes to a stop, a man appears from the baggage car with a winchester repeating rifle in his hand and takes a tour of the express car. He looks under, over and on top of it to be sure there is no one seeking to make entrance to the American Express company's valuable freight. This man with the rifle is not its only guard. There are two men in the car with the most improved Smith & Wesson revolvers in a box which they are obliged to wear upon duty.

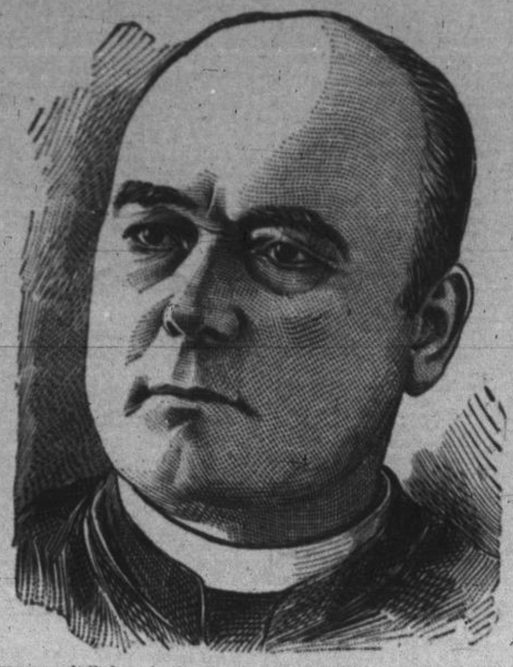
A WELL-KNOWN PRIEST.

His Words Have Influenced Thousands in Canada.



Clergymen of all denominations have of late done much to benefit the health and general physical condition of our people.

Many good and right thinking men and women are of opinion that the faithful clergyman can in many ways show to his people the way of health as well as pointing them to the way of salvation.

Men and women, in order to become good and active christians, should first have bodily health and strength, if there is a possibility of getting these blessings. He or she who struggles with disease and pain, has not power to actively advance the work of our common Master.

How mad and foolish—yes, hypocritical—to urge a starving and famishing man or woman to give up worldly thoughts and sins and look for the peace that cometh from above. To do good, the pangs of hunger must first be appeased; then will it be in order to talk of things spiritual.

In like manner should clergymen and all good church people deal with the sick and suffering. They must first be relieved of physical agony before the sin-sick soul is directed to the Great Physician. It is cheering to know that our clergymen and many true church people recognize this fact and are doing a quiet but grand work for those in agony and disease.

Ministers and priests have not thought it derogatory to their dignity and standing in the church to show their people how broken-down health can be restored, and to explain how a new and better physical life may be obtained.

Clergymen in Canada, who have been great sufferers from nervousness, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism and kidney and liver troubles, have found a complete cure in Paine's Celery Compound, and have publicly testified for the benefit of humanity.

Many a letter have we received from men and women who have been rescued from death, stating that their clergyman had advised and strongly recommended Paine's Celery Compound.

Never before in the history of any christian land, has there existed a medicine that has alike interested clergy and people. All speak strongly and approvingly of Paine's Celery Compound, and never hesitate to recommend it.

The Rev. A. Ouellet, parish priest of Shediac, N.B., one of the ablest priests of the lower provinces, is an ardent advocate of nature's great medicine. The reverend gentleman found in Paine's Celery Compound a new life that he could not obtain from any other source. He writes as follows for the benefit of every Canadian:

"Of Paine's Celery Compound I can speak from experience. I had been laid up with fever and rheumatic gout from the fifth of January till the middle of June; hence my system was fearfully run down. I was very thin and so feeble that for weeks I could not move along without help. I then began to take Paine's Celery Compound according to prescription, and to-day I am as fleshy and strong as I was ten years ago.

I do not say that I am radically cured as yet from gout, but the attacks are much less frequent. In fact I have not been one single day prevented from attending to my usual work since that time. I therefore take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful efficacy of that marvellous medicine.

As a blood purifier it has no equal, and its beneficial influence on the digestive system cannot be questioned. In view of these facts I do not hesitate to advise sick persons to give Paine's Celery Compound a fair trial in the various ailments for which it is recommended. As far as I am concerned I intend to follow up, if possible, the celery treatment until a complete cure is effected."
