PRESIDENT MAKERS,

WHERE THEY HAVE MET AND WHAT THEY HAVE DONE.

This Is the Presidential Year, and in That Connection Felix De Fontaine Tells of What Has Been Done at Former Conventions.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

THE fact is not generally known that the first national political convention ever assembled in the United States was held in Baltimore, September, 1831, when William Wirt and Amos Ellmaker were nominated as the candidates of the anti-Masonic party. Henry Clay and John Sergeant were nominated by a unanimous vote in the same city, Dec. 12, 1831. The Democratic national convention met in Baltimore in 1832 and nominated General Jackson for president and Martin Van Buren for vice president. Preceding the vote for the latter, it was resolved "that two-thirds of the whole number of votes in the convention shall be necessary to constitute a choice." This was the origin of the famous two-thirds rule.

It was not until just before the war that nominating conventions began to attract the large audiences that they now do.

During the exciting period that preceded the election of 1860, Bell and Everett were nominated by the Constitutional Unionists in the Front Street theater, Baltimore, on the 9th of May. The Democrats met May 23, in Institute hall, Charleston, but being unable to agree on a candidate adjourned to meet in Baltimore, June 18, where Douglas and Johnson were nominated. A seceding wing assembled at the Maryland institute, June 28, and chose as candidates John C. Breckinridge and Joseph Lane. The Republicans assembled at Chicago, May 16, and nominated Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin. This convention was held in a monster "wigwam," as it was called, built for the occasion by the Chicago Republican club. It was 180 feet long by 100 feet wide, with a gallery extending on three sides, and it is estimated could accommodate 12,000 spectators. The decorations in flags, flowers, paintings and sculpture were profuse and elaborate and the subject of columns of description by reason of their novelty and beauty.

In 1864 the opposing candidates were Lincoln and Johnson, and McClellan and Pendleton, the two former being nominated in Baltimore and the latter in Chicago. Mr. Lincoln was elected by 212 electoral votes to 21 for McClellan, but in the previous election he lacked nearly a million of votes of receiving a popular majority.

The year 1868 witnessed a gathering of Democrats in national convention, such as had not been seen before in the United States. The body met in Tammany hall, New York, on July 4, and was a monster demonstration, the contest being made almost wholly upon issues growing out of the war and the reconstruction policy of congress. The nominees were Horatio Seymour and Francis P. Blair. The great Democratic wigwam never looked more radiant than on this occasion.

CHICAGO AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

On the 20th of May, 1868, the Republican national convention assembled in Chicago and nominated Grant and Colfax, the scene of the meeting being the Crosby opera house. They were elected by 214 electoral votes to 80 for Seymour and Blair.

The national Republican convention of 1872 was held June 5, in Philadelphia, and resulted in the nomination of General Grant and Henry Wilson. The Liberal Republicans and Democrats met in Cincinnati May 1 of this year and chose for their candidates Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown, Grant receiving 286 electoral votes to 66, of which 42 were given to Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, Mr. Greeley having died between the time of the popular election and that of the electoral college.

In 1876 Cincinnati was the scene of the national Republican convention. Hayes and Wheeler were nominated and declared elected, an electoral commission deciding disputed points in the contest. The convention was held in the Exposition hall, the architectural features of which at the time were likened to "a gigantic railway station with the cars run out and temporary seats put in their places." The platform was not far from the central space. Behind the presiding officer were rows of seats mounting nearly to the roof, all of which commanded a splendid view. Every person present was visible from every other part of the edifice. Galleries ran the whole length of the building. The press, telegraphers and all connected with the distribution of news were amply provided for. There were five entrances for the public and separate entrances for the delegates. The latter were seated in such a manner that those from every state could be easily recognized by the chairman.

The Democratic national convention, which assembled in St. Louis June 27, nominated Tilden and Hendricks. This was likewise a notable gathering, and the place of meeting, also an exposition hall, was distinguished for its architectural beauty. It was 200 feet long, 80 feet wide and 60 feet high. The arrangement of seats was such that every delegate could distinctly hear all that was spoken. On one side of the hall, and about the middle of its length, was the rostrum, and around this point, indicated by banneretes, were congregated the representatives of the respective states. The coup d'œil was superb. Nearly the whole of every side of the hall was of glass, there being seventy-two grand windows draped with crimson curtains, while three great panels in the ceiling were magnificently frescoed.

In 1880, June 2, Garfield and Arthur were nominated at Chicago. The convention was held in the Exposition building, in a great hall 320 feet long and 150 feet wide. It had a seating capacity of from 10,000 to 12,000 persons. Running around the building were commodious galleries, while the auditorium itself was easily adapted for the accommodation of both delegates and alternates and the members of the press and telegraphic corps.

The Democratic convention of 1880, which nominated Hancock and English, was held in Music hall, Cincinnati, June 22. The stage was arranged with seats much as they had been placed during the preceding May festival. These—650 in number—were devoted exclusively to the use of the ladies, and in their bright toilets they made a superb spectacle. The president and officers of the convention occupied a space immediately in front of the ladies. Seats were provided for about 5,700 people and 3,000 more could be accommodated.

The national Democratic convention which nominated Grover Cleveland assembled in Chicago July 9, 1884, in what is technically known as the Exposition building. It was an absurdly large hall, and not more than one-fifth of those present could hear one-tenth of the words of wit and wisdom uttered.

The arrangements were bad. The delegates sat in the center, facing a small president's platform, and the great audience occupied seats on either side, at the rear and in two galleries, which ran the length of the hall. Just in front of the stage was a small, square platform, on which those who addressed the convention could stand while speaking. An audience of from 8,000 to 12,000 people was accommodated.

The Republican prayer asking for which nominated James G. Blaine in Chicago, in the shirts in all makes at Bab. Some idea of the cockatoo the expense of remodeling the hall was nearly $20,000. Seats were arranged for between 12,000 and 14,000 people, the 840 delegates being, of course, nearest the stage.

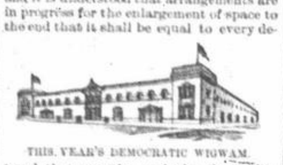
MINNEAPOLIS EXPOSITION BUILDING.

The year 1888 was distinguished by the brilliancy of its national conventions. That of the Democrats assembled at St. Louis, June 5, in the Exposition building. The latter accommodated 15,000 people, and from the platform the eye looked upon a picture full of color such as has rarely been seen in the United States. By an admirable arrangement a door opened into a channel through which the multitude floated into its allotted positions. The floor was divided into three parts by heavy plush covered ropes, the respective divisions being intended for delegates, alternates and guests. The balcony and galleries were allotted to the friends of the delegates. The press arrangements were such that every person in the vast assemblage was in view of every representative of a newspaper. The throng was notable. There were present senators, governors, congressmen, mayors of cities and statesmen of high and low degree filling every kind of office, while looking down upon the distinguished throng from points around the galleries were portraits or statues of Cleveland, Tilden, Hendricks, Hancock, Jackson, Jefferson, Washington and other famous personages in American history.

The Republican convention of 1888, which nominated General Harrison, was held June 19, at Chicago, in the Auditorium building. The dimensions of this hall were 160 by 200 feet, with a capacity for more than 10,000 people. The delegates occupied opera chairs and every one was within good listening distance from the platform. More than 7,000 seats were provided for the general audience and the great galleries afforded ample accommodation to all who held tickets. Portraits of Lincoln, Grant, Garfield and other notable Republican leaders occupied places upon the walls, and the six magnificent iron arches supporting the ceiling were studded with incandescent lights. Flags, bunting and flowers added to the patriotic coloring that prevailed throughout the building.

The "wigwam" in which the national Democratic convention will assemble the present year, 1892, will be specially erected in Chicago. The increasing political interest in these great meetings is still further illustrated by the fact that the contemplated structure will have a frontage of 400 feet and be 250 feet deep. An abundance of windows supply light and air. The stage will accommodate 300 persons. Right and left of the officers of the convention are seats for 300 newspaper men, while immediately in front will be appropriated 840 seats for the delegates. Broad aisles open to these, so that no confusion can occur. Delegations from every state may thus be in close touch with the presiding officer and liberal provision will be made in order that they may promptly communicate with each other. Stairways to the galleries are to be thirty-two feet wide, leading straight from the sidewalk, and arrangements have been made to easily accommodate from 12,000 to 14,000 people. The estimated cost of the structure is $24,000.

The Republican convention of the present year will be held in the picturesque city of Minneapolis. The delegates will assemble on June 7 in what is known as Exposition hall, a mammoth building having a seating capacity for 6,000 persons, and it is understood that arrangements are in progress for the enlargement of space to the end that it shall be equal to every demand that may be made by the public. Certainly the representatives of the press of the country, the telegraphers and other public servants will have no occasion to complain of a perfection of detail in their behalf that recognizes their splendid service to the people.



THIS YEAR'S DEMOCRATIC WIGWAM.

From the foregoing description it will be observed that since 1860 public interest in national conventions has steadily increased. The ordinary hall that is to be found in a city has given place to what is now known as a "wigwam" or an "auditorium," some place of meeting that will seat the growing number of delegates and alternates, as well as the thousands who flock from every part of the country to participate in the possible change of stepping stones from one administration to another. That cities and states vie with each other in the endeavor to attract these national conventions and offer large inducements for the attainment of their purpose is significant of the change that has taken place in the methods of American politics.

Makes Flesh and Blood.

When the system is all run down and there seems to be no hope of obtaining nourishment for the body by the ordinary process of food supply and indigestion, when the body is sinking fast, then is the time to use Miller's Emulsion of Pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. It always works wonders, because it is a flesh and blood maker, and contains all the constituents for nourishment found in wheat, in fact Miller's Emulsion is a perfect "staff of life" and has saved and cured thousands. In big bottles, 50c and $1. Wade's drug store.

They Buy Diamonds.

The well to do natives of the East Indies have not much faith in stocks and bonds. Most of them prefer to invest their savings in diamonds. The rich buy white stones, while those whose means are limited content themselves with diamonds which either contain flaws or specks for are off color. Naturally, the average East Indian is an excellent judge of diamonds. Other gems are also purchased as investments, but not so generally as diamonds.

A Winter of Comfort.

"During the many sessions I have worked in our drafty Press Gallery (House of Commons)," writes Mr. Aubrey C. Hamilton, Ottawa, Can., "this is the only one throughout which I have not been subjected to lumbago. The cause of this is that I used St. Jacobs Oil this winter, and my lumbago then disappeared like snow before the sun." Pain vanishes at its touch.

Origin of Sterling—An Agent of Stirling Worth.

Camden gives the following account of the origin of the word. About the time of Richard I., money coined in the eastern parts of Germany came into special request in England, on account of its purity, and was called Easterling money, as all the inhabitants of that region of Germany were called Easterlings. Ultimately, some of these people, skilled in coining, were sent for to London, to bring the English coin to perfection; and to the new issues under their direction, the name of Easterling, contracted afterwards to Sterling, continued to be applied. The word became fixed in the language.

With us the word Sterling is synonymous with honesty, genuineness and worth. We speak of men possessing "stirling" qualities, and often apply the word when speaking of preparations of great merit and worth.

Canadians of every class and rank, well know the honest, true and remarkable qualities of Paine's Celery Compound as a curative agent. It is the only remedy that can truly claim "stirling" qualities. Like "stirling silver," it has the ring of true honesty—it has never been deceptive—it has fulfilled all expectations and promises.

Men and women have given it the place of honor in their homes, and have discarded the worthless and misleading medicines that failed to accomplish good. The thousands in our country who have testified so strongly in favor of Paine's Celery Compound, are its missionaries for spreading abroad the "stirling" qualities of this great preparation for nervousness, weakness, sleeplessness, moroseness, dyspepsia, neuralgia and rheumatism. Its fame has been made by those who have been cured and given a new life. Paine's Celery Compound is not a cure-all—a remedy for all the ills that flesh is heir to; but it is an infallible, sure and speedy cure for the numberless ills that result from a broken down nervous system.

Our best doctors in Canada recommend it, and prescribe it with pleasure and confidence. This fact proves its "stirling" worth as a healer and cleanser. Try it, dear reader; you have doctored long with other agents which have done you no good, here you are offered the key to new health, it is for you to use it, and open the door to happiness and joy.

A Death in Athol.

John McKibbon died on April 1st, after a brief illness, aged eighty-five years. He was born in county Down, Ireland, and came to this country at the age of fourteen years. About sixty years ago he entered into possession of the farm where he lived continuously until his death, carving out a fine home for himself, his partner in life, who died about four years ago, and his large family. He was a highly respected and prosperous man. Seven children survive him: David D. McKibbon, reeve South Marysburgh and ex-warden of Prince Edward county; R. H. McKibbon, ex-reeve Athol; Wesley McKibbon and Miss Emma McKibbon, Athol; George McKibbon, Toronto; Mrs. W. D. Blakely and Mrs. James Musgrove, Picton. The remains were deposited in Glenwood cemetery vault, Picton.

Baby Shoes.

Said a woman the other day, toying with the dainty kid bootees for baby feet, as she stood at a shoe counter: "I never see these but I think of a pair of little shoes which are a family possession with us. They were made for an uncle of my mother, who was a baby seventy years ago. Save for the size there is nothing babyish about them, for they are a facsimile in miniature of the stout calf shoe which men of that day wore, even to the leather lacings. I feel a thrill of sympathy for the tender little feet they covered so long ago, for they must have been cruel protectors to the soft flesh, but at that time, in that place—it was in New Jersey—nothing else was obtainable, and mother has heard her grandmother tell how she sewed up pieces of felt in crude shoe shape when these strong boots chafed the baby feet. What a contrast to these shapely little things!"
