The Future of the Colorado Desert.

The wonderful results of irrigation have been shown in a most remarkable manner by a freak of the Colorado river. Last year the mystery of Salton Lake attracted the attention and wonder of the State until its source was found in a break in the river bank. This year a phenomenon not less wonderful is to be seen in the same region. The desert has been transformed. The bare sands that have made the region terrible to travellers and stockmen have given place to verdure. Underbrush has covered the country in the line of the inundation, and where only the hardiest of desert plants could before maintain a precarious struggle for existence luxuriant vegetation now covers the land. The desert is doomed. Its disappearance may not be seen by this generation or the next, yet the time is coming when orchards and fields will cover the thousands of square miles now given over to desolation. The infrequent desert plant and the occasional buzzard will give way to all the products of the tropical and semi-tropical lands that its position is fit to raise. The day may come when the present Colorado desert will be reckoned among the most productive land in California. There was a time when the plains of Kern and Tulare were held but little more in esteem than is the desert of to-day. The magic power of irrigation has transformed the old alkali plains into a garden, and it will do as much for the dreaded Colorado desert.—Madera (Cal.) Mercury.

Small Reward From Mrs. Gladstone.

Mrs. Gladstone recently lost her diamond earrings, valued at $2,000, in a train. When she discovered her loss, she communicated with the station master; but the carriage had been already swept and cleaned and put away. However, a further search was made, and the earrings were found on the line near where the carriage had been cleaned. Mrs. Gladstone, who was delighted with her good luck in recovering them, gave the finder $5. It is true she sent $20 for the railway orphanage, but as the cleaner naturally hopes that his children may not require the good offices of an orphanage it is not the slightest good to him that Mrs. Gladstone should give a thank-offering to that particular charity. As far as he is concerned, for being honest and restoring jewels to the value of $2,000, he is the richer by 20 shillings. Now, says Figaro, that is not what I call giving an adequate encouragement to the honest. Of course I know honesty should be inborn, and a thing should be restored to its owner because it is right so to do, but, all the same, I think it is equally the duty of anyone who has the good fortune to get back valuables which have been lost by their own carelessness to give a fair sum of remuneration to the finder. The railway porter could have sold the jewels for at least £100. Five per cent. on this sum would surely have been none too much as an acknowledgment of his honest behaviour.

INJURY TO CORNWALL CANAL.

Navigation Will be Delayed for a Couple of Days.

Yesterday the Richelieu and Ontario navigation company received word from their agent in Cornwall that the two lower gates of lock 19 of the Cornwall canal had been carried away and the wing wall of the lock injured by a steam tug and two barges in tow. The Montreal transportation co. was informed that the injury was caused by the tug Ranger, which had in tow the barge Toronto, bound down. Navigation will be delayed in consequence of the accident. If the canal people have good luck the repairs will be completed to-night. Others predict that it will take four or five days. In any case the delay is serious. The Richelieu boats bound up will have to lie up. The steamers Ocean and Cuba would have got through if the break had occurred a little later, but as it is they will have to remain idle. The Kingston and Montreal forwarding company have two barges of grain and two barges of coal at Dickinson's Landing. The grain is for ocean steamers waiting for it, and it is certain that a loss will arise from its non-arrival.

PRINCESS LOUISE DISASTER.

The Events in Connection With the Collision up the Bay.

W. A. Hungerford, commercial traveller, Belleville, reported a miraculous escape. As soon as the collision was over he seized life preservers and threw them to the ladies as there was no time to cut the life boats loose. He added:

"Some one called to those on board to jump. I heard a splash, and thinking that some rash lady had leaped into the water I jumped in after her. I found that it was a boy belonging to the boat. The boat was running at rapidly reducing speed, when we felt ourselves beached. Life preservers had been brought into general requisition and some of the male passengers leaped on shore with ropes when all were safely conveyed to land. If we had to have gone another twenty-five yards I do not see now how the passengers could have been got safely to shore."

Four Italian music vendors mourn the loss of a pet monkey.

Engineer booth stuck bravely to his post to the very last, and deserves credit for his courage and faithfulness. He lost everything he had on board.

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Whitfield lost all their samples and trunks. There was very little freight on board. A horse and buggy was on board which was being shipped to John Nicholson, liveryman, of this city. The animal, with almost human instinct, seemed to be alive to its peril, and breaking from its fastenings leaped into the water and swam ashore soon after the collision took place. It was captured by a farmer and put into the stable.

J. F. Wills, barrister, Belleville, when asked as to the parties to blame, said it was Capt. Rothwell. He had no right to attempt to cross the bow of the other boat. The rule is to pass on the starboard side unless signalled for the other side and such signal was not given soon enough to do any good. The only blame that attaches to the tug was in not whistling soon enough.

On Saturday next the str. Hero leaves Gunn's wharf for "the grandest of all tours" amongst the islands. The following will be the route: North of Cedar, Milton and St. John's Island, across Main channel to Frog Island, thence through the winding channels of the Gananoque group, recrossing Main channel to the Red House group, from which the steamer will enter the lost channel and will wind and rewind her way through this intricate passage, until at last the delighted passengers will find themselves at Rockport. No stops will be made. The steamer will then return to Kingston by the American channel.

THE AGENTS ARE LIABLE

INTERESTING CASE BEFORE THE DIVISION COURT DECIDED.

The Full Text of the Judgment as Delivered by Judge Wilkinson — A Contract Made but its Fulfilment Refused—Contracted in Their Own Name.

At the sitting of the division court held in Kingston on July 19th, a case of importance to merchants was tried. James Richardson & Son telegraphed Lord & Co., Chicago, for quotations of corn and were referred to Ross Bros. & Co., Iroquois, agents of the Chicago firm. Ross Bros. & Co. telegraphed the Richardsons that they would furnish car of corn on track at Kingston for 62c and signed their own names. The Richardsons accepted the offer, corn went up and Ross Bros. & Co. refused to fill the contract. Action was brought by Richardson & Sons against Ross Bros. & Co. for damages. Judgment having been reserved was delivered on the 3rd inst. The following is the full text of the judgment as delivered by judge Wilkinson:

"The plaintiffs now sue the defendants for the amount of the damages which they have undoubtedly sustained in consequence of the failure to carry out the contract. The defendants resist on the ground that they were merely acting as agents for Lord & Co., a fact of which the plaintiffs were perfectly aware.

"I think it well established that the defendants were agents and that the plaintiffs knew that fact, but still it is clear that the defendants contracted in their own names and thereby rendered themselves personally responsible. In fact both parties were liable to the plaintiffs. I did think, at the trial, that the plaintiffs' letter of the 16th May abandoned the claim against the defendants, but on further consideration I am inclined to the opinion that it has not that effect, but still leaves upon the liability of both parties.

"Higgins vs. Senior, 8, M. & W., 834, was an action on a written agreement purporting on the face of it to be made by the defendant and subscribed by him for the sale of goods, and it was held that the defendant could not relieve himself from liability by proving that the agreement was really made by him as an agent for another party and that the plaintiff knew the fact when the agreement was signed.

"Calder vs. Dodd, L. R. 6, C. P. 486, was a case in which Ching, a broker, was authorized by the defendant to buy cotton for him, but not to disclose his name. Ching's credit not being good enough to enable him to obtain a contract he gave the plaintiff the name of his principal and bought and sold. Notes were exchanged between the defendant and Ching, in which the latter was named as broker. Ching wrote defendant an advice note informing him that he had bought the cotton for him, and the defendant did not repudiate the contract. An invoice was made out to Ching, and the market falling Ching was called upon to accept and pay for the cotton and threatened with legal proceedings. Failing to obtain payment from Ching the plaintiff sued defendant and it was held that the plaintiff had recourse against the defendant; that the insertion of Ching's name in the contract, though his principal was known at the time, and subsequent demands upon Ching for payment did not necessarily amount to an election to give credit to Ching only. In the course of his judgment Bond C. J., says at page 491: 'It is true as has been said that the agent may be personally charged and that when he has given his signature to the contract he is stopped from saying that he did not contract personally. That, however, is a very different thing from saying that the real principal when disclosed cannot sue or be sued. The suppression of the principal's name is entirely consistent with the practice of many brokers to conceal transactions of speculation. The effect is that if the broker enters into contracts in his own name and has a principal those whom he contracts with will have the responsibility both of the principal and the broker. There is nothing inconsistent in thus giving an option to hold either responsible.'

"In Curtis vs. Wilkinson, L. R. 10, Q. B. 57, the plaintiff sought to recover the price of goods bought by one Boulton in his own name, but in reality as agent for the defendant. The fact of the agency was not disclosed at the time of purchase but it afterwards became known to plaintiff and after that Boulton having filed a petition for the liquidation of his estate an affidavit for the purpose of proving, under the liquidation for the price of the goods was made by a clerk of the plaintiffs treating Boulton as the debtor and was sent to be filed. Shortly after it had been filed this action was brought against the defendant and he was held to be liable. I also refer to Reid vs. Draper, 6, H. & N. 814; Jones vs. Littledale, 6, A. & C. 486; Thomson vs. Davenport, 9 B. C. 69.

"The defendants having contracted in their own names cannot now set up that they were acting merely as agents and that the plaintiffs were aware of that fact and must be held responsible for the loss sustained in carrying out the agreement. I think the damage is the difference in the price of corn, which is $39.96, for which amount there will be a verdict."

H. V. Lyon acted as counsel for Richardsons and Mr. Ross, Gananoque, for the defendants.

POISON PEPPERED.

But He Smiled and Took It Nicely—Then He Got Back Finely.

The Toronto News publishes a column account of a lively rumpus at the meeting of the pharmacy council. President Hallahock the clenched fist under N. U. Polson's nose and called him an obstructionist, a radical, a destroyer, a puller down, and the row was all over the newspaper reporters. A. R. Petrie brought in a supplementary report to the by-laws and legislation report. The supplementary report recommended a number of changes in the pharmacy act. The reporters were requested not to give out the enactments until they were finally passed by the council. The reporters agreed, but asked that they be excluded from the room by resolution.

It was at this stage that N. U. Polson advocated a thorough discussion of the clauses and was for having it published for the benefit of the public and druggists. It was then that president Hall got after Mr. Polson to "give him that setting out he was long working for," and he proceeded with his tirade, talking very recklessly. Mr. Hall was greatly excited and could scarcely contain himself. Mr. Polson sat looking around with a careless air, smiling as each sentence was shot out.

Mr. Polson replied briefly and sarcastically, and was glad he was "not going to be executed right away." He never knew that free discussion was a crime, and abuse only strengthens a man's case. This abuse was heaped on him because his criticisms were a terror to the council of the college. He referred to the great faith the Kingston druggists have in him when they send him here year after year as their representative, and advocated the fullest publicity to the report, talking for some time quite coolly but very cutingly towards the president.

The mineral well at Portsmouth has been thoroughly cleaned out and piped. A company will be organized to operate the well. W. CASEY, Bandmaster.

He's a Good Hitter.

Rev. Mr. Grout recently played cricket at Brockville against Carleton Place. The Herald says: "Rev. Mr. Grout, of Lyn, the international cricketer, whose batting record this season against leading Toronto and Ottawa clubs reached the eighties, was speedily removed. Mr. Grout is certainly a composed scientific wielder of the willow, and operates with remarkable ease and grace, but unfortunately he was displaced for nine runs, being caught. During his brief innings, however, he made the 'hit' of the day, which secured him four, driving the ball over a high fence in rear of the field."

Quite an Array of Talent.

Manager Haystead says that he has engaged the following people for the Josie Mills dramatic company for the coming season: Frank Amtrose, late of R. L. Downing's company, leading man; Joan J. Owens, heavies; John W. Turnbull, character comedian; Fred. Eckhardt, singing and dancing comedian; Nat M. Dawa, general actor; J. S. Wraymont, utility, and T. D. Kelly, props.; Miss Katie Ambrose, Miss Phoebe Clarke, singing and dancing soubrette; Miss Mable Holger; Fred. W. Robinson, general agent; Ed. H. Barnstead, jr., advertising agent, and Prof. Wilkins' band and orchestra.

He Will Sing Here.

Rev. G. W. Kerby, of Hamilton, holidaying in this vicinity, has been induced to preach here on Sunday, in the morning in Sydenham street Methodist church, and in the evening in Queen street Methodist church. In the latter he gives a song sermon. He is a fine singer and has frequently been called upon in conference to "pitch the tune," while he is continually engaged as a vocalist at various kinds of religious services. Mr. Kerby was recently appointed by conference to raise $8,000 for an embarrassed church, at Woodstock, (built during his pastorate). In less than three weeks he secured half the amount; he will resume his work after the holidays and capture the balance.

An Incorrect Statement.

The republican office holders are exerting themselves to have F. G. Weeks, of Thousand Island park, quizted for a violation of the alien contract labor law and a dispatch sent out on Monday reads: "Mr. Weeks, as well as the Canadian gentleman named Birch, who had a hand in the affair, have been placed under bonds to appear before the United States district court next month." So far as Mr. Birch is concerned it is incorrect. No action can be taken against him. But he has been considerably hounded both at Thousand Island park, where his summer resort is, and in Kingston by customs officers to try and secure his evidence in the case. Mr. Birch declines to place any construction upon the conversations he may have had with Mr. Weeks; nor will he gratify the desire of partizan office holders to get a big slice of a $1,000 fine they are after.

Death of Rev. James Godfrey.

Rev. James Godfrey, who had been slightly unwell for the last two or three days died suddenly, last evening, at his residence, 216 Gordon street. He was born at or near Cork, Ireland, and was 68 years old. Educated under Dr. Bethune, at the theological school, Cobourg, he was subsequently admitted to the degree of B. A., at Trinity college, Toronto. He was made a deacon in 1851, and ordered priest in 1852 by the bishop of Toronto. His first charge was in the Niagara district where he was a travelling missionary during 1851-52, and for the 21 years following he had charge of the large mission of Goulbourn and Huntley. While their the disastrous fire, which ravaged the Ottawa district on Aug 17th, 1870, occurred. He was from home at the time and drove through twenty miles of a flaming country in agony for his family. The parsonage was destroyed, and he and his family spent the night lying in a furrow. His nervous system never recovered from the shock then received. Nevertheless he undaunted and held the parish of Wolfe Island from 73 to 84 when he retired. He has since resided in Kingston. Two sons, both resident in Vancouver, and a daughter survive him. He was a man of very studious habits and his library contained many rare old books.
