FASHION SAYS CHANGE NOW

Necessity Demands New Shoes.

It's a solemn fact
That we lead the
Ball in the Shoe
Trade. There are
Reasons why we should.
No house in Kingston
Carries the volume of
Stock that we do,
Nor the immense variety,
And we believe that
It has been demonstrated.
The odd time
That we set the measure
In low prices.
We are satisfied
With small profits
That seems to be the key
To the situation.
We simply turn the key
And the situation is Unlocked.
We'd like you to see
Our fall display.

And Another Reminiscence.

When the Royal Canadian rifle regiment was disbanded, wiped off the British army roll in the policy for abandoning imperial garrison service, nearly thirty years ago, there was many regrets in Kingston, where the headquarters were last located. The men of the corps were all veterans joining after a full ten years service in other regiments, and therefore were fully devoted to army life, and as a rule well behaved. It was a sort of retreat for men whose taste for civilian life was spoiled by their army experience, and their steadiness and discipline did good service for England in Canada, the desertions from regiments of young men being numerous. The disbandment was near at hand, and the WHIG announced that the colors would be trooped the following morning, when the fine band, the delight of every citizen, would also parade, as did the regiment, for the last time. As the hour drew near, so did the citizens in great numbers to see this very impressive ceremony and among the spectators were several militia colonels, majors and captains, not to speak of subalterns and full privates. But the barracks were their usual quiet, only the gate sentry was in parade dress; and so one by one the crowd dispersed after some had whispered that it was one of the WHIG's jokes, then quite frequent and effective. The militia officers afterwards wanted to go to some lonely dell and kick themselves for being so flat as to forget that rifle regiments do not carry colors, this being the first article of their creed.

A Reliable Store To Deal In.

Prevost at "the New York" clothing store has been established since 1872 and has always kept a special line for order work. His $3.50 pants, his $13.50 suits, and his $12.50 overcoats are great value.

Taking The White Veil.

An interesting ceremony took place in the Hotel Dieu, last evening, when Miss Mary Murphy, of Cornwall, made her second step in the order of the religious hospitallers of St. Joseph by taking the white veil in that cloistered order of nuns.

A Big Week's Business.

Last week there were more trains handled on the G.T.R. in the division than has ever been known before in the history of the road. In all there were 259 trains passing Kingston; 149 specials; 12 way freights; 38 passenger trains; 24 mixed trains and 36 regular trains.

A Good Market.

There was an exceptionally large market this morning, the fine weather bringing the farmers into town in big numbers. Potatoes sold from 75c to 90c per bag; apples, 50c; poultry the same as other market days this week: lamb, 6c and 7c; mutton, 5c and 6c; eggs, packed, 18c, fresh, 25c.

Killed By A Board.

Charles Letts, of Calumet Island, while visiting at a friend's house, went out to attend to a horse that was tied to a board fence and was becoming restless. While the horse was jerking at his halter a board flew off the fence and struck Mr. Letts, and he died the next day from the effects of the blow.

Good Advice for the Rich.

The Gananoque Journal in referring to recent additions made to the funds of Queen's university, says: "There are few ways in which those who are blessed with a surplus of this world's goods can better dispose of it than by devoting a portion to the advancement of higher education."

Had A Finger Bruised.

W. McCartney, contractor, met with a painful accident while engaged in the new Y.M.C.A. building yesterday. In some manner in connection with the plumbing one of his fingers got caught and was badly squeezed. Dr. Dupuis was summoned and the injury attended to. The finger is in a bad shape.

He Distinguished Himself.

Dave Robinson, C.P.R. telegraph operator, distinguished himself at Smith's Falls and Irish Creek last week, where he was especially sent by the company to attend to the press in connection with the Luckey murder. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights he sent off an average of 10,000 words.

Cut Herself Badly.

Mrs. Jane McLean, of Smith's Falls, last week attempted suicide with a razor which she concealed in the bed clothes when retiring to bed. She made a gash in her throat, which bled profusely, but the cut was not deep or serious. The cause was despondency brought on by a long illness and the commitment of her husband a few days before to the county jail as a judgment debtor.

Entertaining The Bible Class.

A very pleasant evening was spent last night at the residence of George E. Hague, manager of the Merchants' bank, by the young men's bible class of St. James' church. After indulging in numerous games, etc., the company adjourned to the dining room, where ample refreshments were done justice to. The young men left for their homes shortly after eleven o'clock, all loud in their praises of the host and hostess.

Fire Near Clayton.

The barns on the Shaw farm situated on the Military road in Pamella, near Sonville's hotel, and occupied by John Taylor, were destroyed by fire Monday night together with twenty-five tons of hay and about a thousand bushels of grain and nearly all the farming utensils. Mr. Taylor was away from home threshing, but Mrs. Taylor succeeded in getting the stock out of the building, which with their contents were insured in the grange for about $1,200.

What Next?

We have had railroads, fire engines, live horses, tanks, races and so forth in stage productions. Now Aaron H. Woodhull puts a steam boiler explosion in Uncle Hiram. The effect is immense and is packing the theatres everywhere. The New York harbor, with the Brooklyn bridge and Bartholdi statue is also another fine scene. Mr. Woodhull also has two other wonderful effects under consideration. Two Uncle Hiram companies will be put on the road next season, while a third will play in England. Uncle Hiram still is the attraction at Martin's opera house, Monday evening, Oct. 24th.

BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

THEY ARE ENGLISH IN EVERYTHING BUT NAME.

The English Cousins Lead Both in Fashions and in Love—Grief May Come to the Democrats—Jashne Back to the City—Telling the Story Once More.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—When our English cousins, a hundred and ten years ago, nailed the flag of old England to the flagstaff on the battery, greased the pole, unrove the halyards, and topping their booms sailed away, our ancestors fancied that we had got rid of them for all time. I wonder what would be the feeling of those ancient patriots if they could return to this blessed republic now and see how completely our old enemy has captured us. The grim old warriors of revolutionary times wanted to Americanize everything. Their descendants, at least that portion of them that are the recognized leaders of swelldom, are English in everything, and American is nothing but the name.

If you meet them riding horseback on the road they are just such stunners as you might meet at Epsom or on Rotten Row. The horse's tail is docked; the top boots, cords and whip came from London; the coat and waistcoat have a Bond street stamp; and the saddle is English from tree to pigskin; the bridle, too, is English; and this howling American swell, when he is mistaken for an Englishman, thinks it about the highest compliment you can pay him. Our turnouts are English, from a Tallyho to a dog cart. No gentleman who amounts to anything would be without that most distinctive of all English carriages, a trap, and attached to the trap is an English tiger, who is just as necessary as the trap.

But it is not in fashion alone that our English cousins are supreme. In the field of love they are just about as lucky as they are in the field of Mars. If there happens to be an uncommonly pretty girl, with an uncommonly nice dot, just in the nick of time along comes "the Lord knows who" and whips her off to England, dukes and all. Our highest style of rural architecture is an English cottage, and as far as our amusements are concerned, three quarters of the best things before the public of New York to-day are English, and more than one-half of the leading actors and opera singers are English.

A radical change is taking place in the character of our popular amusements. The summer before last the Casino managers made a garden on the roof of the theatre. It was not at first intended as a place for entertainment, but rather for recreation during the hot nights of summer, where a gentleman could enjoy his sherry cobbler and his cigar, while madame discussed her gateaux and ices. Gradually, songs, dances and instrumental solos were introduced, till the roof garden resembled a Paris cafe chantant.

The Casino for several years past has been the fashionable home for light opera. But now, the management has concluded to give an entertainment after the style of the London concert halls, which has been so successful for the past twenty years on the other side of the water. We have evidently been drifting that way for the past ten or fifteen years, and a style of entertainment has been inaugurated which has all the characteristics of a variety show. In fact, the stars in these pieces were old-time variety actors who had some specialty which an ingenious playwright strung together and called it "The Brass Monkey" or "A Hole in the Ground," or some other absurd name, having about the same relationship to the subject matter as Artemus Ward's celebrated lecture had to "The babes in the wood."

It is a matter of little moment what you call it; the only question is conclusively answered by Miss Lottie Collins, who has been kicking up her dainty little heels at the Standard theatre for the past three weeks with her Ta-ra-boom-de-re, ta-ra-boom-de-ra, and getting therefore twelve hundred dollars every week, and she is worth it, for she draws it, the house being packed from pit to dome ever since she opened.

I fancy I hear you say, "What fools!" perhaps so, but they are made up of all classes. In the boxes of the Standard every night, can be seen doctors and lawyers, merchants and bankers, and men and women of every condition. Almost going wild over the grotesque performance of this English variety dancer. It is a craze—that is all there is of it—the same that will lead a lot of society swells to leave their elegant clubs and comfortable homes and tramp all night, through cold, fog and rain, to see a couple of brutes pummel each other to pieces, and in addition to their personal discomfort pay fifty dollars for the privilege. But, to return to the English concert hall; if the Casino is a success, of which I have no doubt, I shall expect to see them established in every part of New York and Brooklyn, and then when our cousins from Bow Bell come avisiting, they will feel as much at home as they would in Soho Square or Picadilly. "'Tis true, 'tis pity, 'tis 'tis true."—Shakespeare.

It is a cloud no bigger than a man's head, but it is portentious, nevertheless, and may bring grief into the democratic camp at a time when it most stands in need of comfort. Judge Rufus Andrews has been nominated for chief justice of the court of appeals by the republicans, and this nomination has been endorsed by the democratic state committee. As to the fitness of Judge Andrews for the position there can be no question. But the Brooklyn Eagle, one of the most independent and influential democratic papers in the state of New York, claims that the nomination was made at the instigation of Senator David B. Hill for the purpose of keeping his henchman, Isaac H. Maynard, in his place, and securing the republican endorsement for Mr. Maynard when he comes before the people for election in 1895. Mr. Maynard will be remembered in connection with the bold purloining of the Dutchess county electoral returns, by which nefarious act the senate majority was stolen from the electors of New York. The Eagle thinks it ought to be impossible for the republicans to condone that crime, and plainly declares that it looks like one of a series of acts looking to the defeat of Mr. Cleveland in November next.

There has not been a moment since the Chicago convention when the Eagle has had any confidence in the sincerity of the democratic state committee or in the loyalty of Senator Hill, to the democratic presidential nominee. Money has been scarce at the democratic headquarters, and chairman Harrity's urgent appeal for funds so far met with the most unsatisfactory response. Mr. Cleveland and three friends put up $10,000 each, but that is only a drop in the bucket when hundreds of thousands are needed. The Eagle virtually challenges Tammany Hall to beat Mr. Cleveland if they dare, and copies an article from the World which threatens extermination to every member of that body if Mr. Cleveland is defeated in November. Everything depends on the electoral vote of New York; whoever gets that will, beyond all question, take possession of the White House on the 4th of March next. Harrison or Cleveland, which shall it be?Ick out of my right eye, it looks like Harrison; I look out of my left eye and it looks like Cleveland; I look out of both eyes at once and I cannot see at all. Perhaps Ignatius Donnelly, the man who deciphered the Shakespearian cryptogram, can tell. We pause in silence for Ignatius to speak.

The return of Henry W. Jashne to the city on Saturday last, after six years and a half of enforced absence at Sing Sing, calls for more than a passing notice. It brings to mind the Broadway steal of 1884, when Jacob Sharp bought the entire board of aldermen of the city of New York with two exceptions, for a sum which has been variously estimated at from $200,000 to a million of dollars. $300,000 worth of the bonds of the Broadway road were never accounted for, they simply disappeared as if by magic, and were supposed to have been divided among the boodlers; and in addition to the bonds it was also estimated that five hundred thousand dollars in cash was also to be divided among them. The division of the spoil was entrusted to a clerk of the board who had acted as a go-between in several previous transactions.

It is said that "there is honor among thieves," but there was no honor in this thief. Instead of dividing the spoil equally among his fellow thieves, who had no idea of the amount he received, he bargained with them for their votes at twenty thousand dollars each, the money, in bank bills, to be placed in the lockers of the aldermen as soon as the votes were recorded overriding the mayor's veto of the Broadway surface railroad franchise. The deal was consummated, and then followed the indictment of the entire board except the two I have mentioned, one of whom was the present mayor of the city, Hugh J. Grant. The vote was passed and when the aldermen went to their boxes most of them found the $20,000 all right, but the Hon. Patrick Duffy, of Duffyville, afterwards swore on the trial that there was only $10,000 in his box, and actually wanted to enter suit against John Keenan and Billy Maloney when these two gentlemen returned to New York after four years' exile in Canada. When the news of the expected indictment got out the thieves took flight, all except Thomas Cleary, alderman of the Second ward and janitor of the Equitable life insurance building. Henry W. Jashne was caught and put on trial. He had been acting president of the board and was then serving his third term. To the astonishment of everybody it came out on the trial that the man who held the second place in power in this imperial city was known to the police as the companion of thieves and a receiver of stolen goods, and just before his last election paid Mrs. Schuyler Hamilton, of West Forty-Eighth street, a thousand dollars in settlement of silverware that had been stolen from her house and had been melted down at Jashne's establishment on Broome street. The circumstances as near as I can remember them are these: The house of Mrs. Hamilton was robbed of a silverware set worth $1,200. Chief Byrnes' detectives found the crooks that did the job, and when hard pushed confessed that they had sold the stuff to Jashne. Among the set was a very beautiful silver tray, also a tea pot and coffee pot. The workmanship was so exquisite on these pieces that Jashne could not find it in his heart to put them in the crucible, so he stored them away in his safe, and when the detectives made a raid on his place, guided by the crooks who stole the plunder, they found the damning evidence of his guilt. Mrs. Hamilton got what remained of her silverware, and Jashne paid her $1,000 for the portion that had been melted down. It seems incredible that with a knowledge of these facts such a man should have been allowed to take his seat in the board of aldermen, and not only that, but that such a rascal should have been elected vice-president of the board, but New York at that time had reached the lowest ebb of degradation. Jashne was placed on trial, convicted and sentenced to nine years in states prison, which his good conduct reduced to six years and a half. His fellow-thieves, O'Neill and McQuade, served short terms and were released some years ago; the others fled to Canada and remained in exile several years, when the election of John R. Fellows, the Tammany hall candidate for district attorney, gave them the assurance that they had nothing more to fear, and they all came back and are with us now.

Old Jacob Sharp, who gave the million of boodle and who got the franchise, died pending his appeal for a new trial. He lay many months in Ludlow street jail, a star boarder of the warden at $100 a week, and was only released on bail a few days before he died.

No one now would be willing to do without the Broadway railroad. It was not the railroad that excited the indignation of the citizens, but the infamous manner in which the franchise was procured. Several parties were fighting to get it, and one party had offered a million in cash to the city, besides a large percentage of the profits, but the aldermen would not listen to it, they wanted the million themselves and they made a bold attempt to get it, but it involved them all in ruin, though the road itself is a gold mine to the company that owns it, and pays more money into the city treasury than all the other railroads in New York. The only two persons connected with that infamous deal who appear to have escaped punishment are John Keenan and Billy Maloney, who had the division of the swag. You can see them on the sunny side of Broadway almost any afternoon. They now act, neither do they spin, yet verily I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like unto them.—BROADBRIM.

CIRCLE OF THE CHURCHES.

The News From All Denominations—The Filling of the Pulpits.

The harvest cantata, given in Sydenham street church a few Sundays ago, made such a hit that the service will be repeated.

The services at Bethel church to-morrow morning will be conducted by Thos. Shanks, and in the evening J. A. Redden will officiate.

Queen street Methodist church—Rev. C. O. Johnston at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.; evening subject, "Employers and Employees." Pewholders come early.

Rev. D. C. Sanderson will preach morning and evening in Brock street Methodist church. The Ball family of jubilee singers will sing at both services.

Sydenham street church—The Rev. Thos Griffith, Ph.D., will preach to-morrow. Evening subject: "A great storm at sea, but a greater pilot." Strangers welcome.

The bishop of Ontario will hold confirmation service at Morrisburg on Oct. 30th. The harvest festival on Oct. 16th was choice and Rev. Prof. Worrell's services highly appreciated.

Rev. J. K. McMorine leaves for Washington and South Carolina on Tuesday. He will preach at both services of St. James' next Sunday. Rev. Mr. Bramish, locum tenens, will arrive at the end of the week.

All Saints', Division street, Sunday service: Holy eucharist 8 a.m. and 11 a.m., evening 7 p.m.; holy days, holy eucharist, 7:30 a.m.; week days, Friday, 7:30 p.m. The daily service is discontinued for the winter.

In answer to a question about the week of prayer, which will take place in November next, Mr. Booth said that he believed it would be a greater success than ever before. He hoped that $20,000 would be raised in the dominion, not a cent of which would be spent out of the country.

In an interview at Montreal Commandant Booth said he was going to import officers from France for the French work. He touched on the uneasiness which had manifested itself in Toronto and other parts of Ontario. He attributed the difficulties which had arisen to the rapidity with which work had been pushed on the first instance, resulting, in many cases, in officers having been located in districts where there were few or none of that class they were intended to deal with. These matters would soon be arranged and scattered neighborhoods worked from a common centre after the original Methodist plan.

A Bad Accident.

A serious accident occurred at the Rose settlement, four miles east of Dunbigh. A little girl, Miss Kyle, was in the act to hold a team of horses owned by James McGregor. The horses ran away and the girl fell on the harness. In attempting to save her life McGregor nearly lost his own. He ran in front of the team to stop them, but was knocked down and run over by the horses and wagon, one wheel went over his abdomen and another over his head. The little girl miraculously escaped.

Killed In The Woods.
