CALLED TO TIME.

The Canadian Manufacturer has called the sugar refiners down for presuming to punish a wholesale merchant in Kingston for leaving the guild and so passing from beyond its dictation. Listen to this:

"The refiners stipulate the price at which the wholesale grocers may sell sugar, and the guild will not allow a member to cut prices. If the price is cut out goes the member; and if he can get any sugar at all from the refiners it is at an advanced price. Canada has no experience with any other such tyrannical combines as the sugar refiners and the wholesale grocers' guild. Perhaps these latter are in no condition to help themselves, for they must do just what the refiners say. The refiners are the masters of the situation, and this by the grace and goodness of the Canadian government. Their industry is protected by the tariff, as it should be, but the national policy never contemplated giving them the power to be the tyrants they are. We are accustomed to viewing the McKinley tariff as the acme of protection, but that measure gives American refiners but $10 per ton duty on sugar, while the Canadian tariff gives Canadian refiners $16 per ton. And Canadian consumers are the sufferers. If our duty was no higher than the American duty, the wholesale grocers could protect themselves from the extortion of Canadian refiners by importing German or English sugar. As we have before shown, the Canadian government is placing a duty of $16 per ton on refined sugar, besides giving Canadian refiners as much protection as American refiners, gives them, in addition thereto, the absolute power to squeeze and extort $6 per ton on all the sugar they can produce out of Canadian consumers."

And the cure for this is what? An intimation from the government that this tyranny must stop. It is a welcome sign when the high protectionist papers are out spoken upon the refiners' imposition and boldly denounce it. Perhaps the refiners think they can defy the government, but dare they do it? Let them try.

WHERE SALISBURY STANDS!

The most conservative member of the conservative party in England is Lord Salisbury. He is a deep thinker, a keen observer of passing events, an expert judge of political causes and effects. He has watched closely the agitation in favor of imperial federation, he has, we presume, noted the propagandism conducted in the colonies by Col. Vincent and his satellites, and the conflict between high and low tariffs in the old and new worlds, and with a full knowledge of the significance of his speech he has had the temerity to say at the recent Guildhall banquet:

"It seems to me that the welfare of nations, if you are to judge by the interest they take in the subject, is slowly changing its object and its field, and that it is the industrial competition which chiefly occupies in these days the chancelleries and diplomacies. The great subjects of consideration are those treaties of commerce which are to expire next year; the great question is what tariffs will the various nations adopt with regard to each other. And though, with respect to material welfare, I think we can hold out to you the most promising anticipations, as far as our present prospects go, with respect to this industrial warfare which has for its weapons protective legislation, and has for its prize the markets of various countries, I am afraid we must be content to occupy for a time a peculiar and isolated condition. The cause of protection does not sink—it rises. The recent elections in the United States have shown that the slight reaction against protection has spent its force. The one colony which we are able to cite as a free trade colony—New South Wales—I am afraid no longer has an unspotted robe in that respect, and we shall have the advantage, I think, before very long of being the Athanasius contra mundum of free trade. But I have no doubt that the commercial community of this country does not falter in its attachment to free trade; and I do not ascribe it to any special virtues in that respect, because the fact that the articles with respect to which we should have to exercise protection, if we exercise it at all, are mainly articles of first consumption, bearing upon the necessities of the whole body of our population, is, in my belief, an absolute guarantee that we shall never return to the ways of protection."

The italics at the close of this paragraph are ours. These thoughts were not specially emphasized by my lord, but they had been read by the British and continental press causing a quietus on the efforts of his followers for any change of policy tending towards protection. Lord Salisbury is a philosopher, and sees plainly that to advocate an abandonment of free trade would be to court a contingency which the government cannot meet and the people do not court. The premier does not hedge a bit in his statements. "We shall never return to protection" he affirms, and this is his conviction after a calm survey of the whole situation. The protectionist who can take comfort from the speech is quite equal to the task of extracting sunbeams from cucumbers.

THE KEELEY CURE.

"Is drunkenness curable?" has been a live topic for many a year, and so it increased interest was lent recently by the published experiences of those who have tried the gold cure at the Keeley Institute in Dwight, Ill. The simplicity of the method—the injection hypodermically of some unknown drug into the left arm, and the consumption of small quantities of bichloride of gold in some appetizingly prepared fluid — attracted many, but no one gave the "cure" the notoriety which came with its application to Col. J. F. Mines, a journalist and literateur, whose sketches over the signature of Felix Oldboy charmed and edified so many. Col. Mines had a great besetting sin, his fondness for liquor. He could not imbibe mildly but declared that at times a spell came upon him and while it lasted his thirst for stimulants was simply insatiable. These periodical debauches made and wreck of him, mentally and physically. He was in despairing mood—feeling that for him it was hopeless to think of reform, that the demon that seemed to possess him at times would eventually lead him to destruction—when he decided to try the gold cure. He left the Keeley Institute a changed man, and one year later, having no desire to return to his former ways, with a hatred for liquor that seemed to be abiding, he wrote the panegyric which went the rounds of the press and gave the gold cure its praise. A month or so later the poor fellow fell from grace, was carried from the gutter to the hospital, and unhappily passed away. The circumstances necessitated apparently some explanation from Dr. Keeley, and in the North American Review he writes:

"The fall and death of Col. John F. Mines, cannot affect the public appreciation of my discovery, except among those whose only information on the subject was derived from his article in the October number of the North American Review. Of the 700 patients now at Dwight under treatment not five per cent. are there through any other agency than their own personal knowledge of cures, ranging from one to ten years. The Keeley cure has advanced slowly, without advertisement except that of cured men. From one patient, twelve years ago, till now the average attendance is as above. About the beginning of the present year the Chicago Tribune opened its columns to expatients for the relation of their personal experiences and received many. This information, taken advantage of, has placed cured men in almost every city, town, and hamlet in the United States, as well as in many foreign countries. The indutiable evidence of these cures remain and make the Keeley institutes the Meccas of the liquor and opium habitues."

And so Keeley has not been one whit discouraged. The lapses are seemingly few, but it is difficult to accurately estimate the effects of any experiments where the appetite is concerned. That any can be cured of drunkenness is, however, a fact of which too much cannot be said. Would that the gold cure were more generally applied in the hope of the general reformation that is much acquired.

CAUSED A FLURRY.

A Challenge From the Connollys is Before the Public.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—As a matter of fact the ministers of the crown were not troubling themselves about questions of cabinet reconstruction this afternoon. They have other knots to untangle. One of them has to do with the Connolly prosecution, which was resumed before Judge Ross here this morning. The Connollys have challenged the government to a proof of the right or the wrong in their dealings. Nine days ago Nicholas K. Connolly and Michael Connolly wrote out a proposal to the government, which, after being gone over by their legal advisor, was a few days later placed in the hands of Frank Smith, acting minister of public works, to be submitted to the cabinet council. The Haggart demonstration at Perth, and the time taken by Sir John Thompson, to whom the document was submitted first for his consideration, delayed the presentation of this document to the council until this afternoon. It was discussed by the ministers, but no decision was made about it. Your correspondent is able to give to the Mail's readers the document which was the main matter of discussion in the privy council chamber this afternoon. It is as follows:

KINGSTON, Ont., Nov. 16, 1891.

Hon. Frank Smith, Acting Minister of Public Works:

Sir,—Being members of the late firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., who have had in charge the complete practical management of the different contract works awarded by the Quebec harbor commissioners or the department of public works of the federal government, to the said firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., we desire most respectfully to say that we feel great injustice and wrong have been done us by the report of the committee of the house of commons on privileges and elections, at the conclusion of which, and on ex-parte testimony, the members of the late firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. are branded as conspirators and thieves. During the progress of the investigation before the committee on privileges and elections, we were repeatedly told that we were not on trial, that there was no charge against us, etc., and by such repeated assurances we were lulled into security, and therefore, not wishing to protract the enquiry, we did not take means to refute the allegations made by the parties whose testimony in several important particulars the committee refused to believe. During the eighteen years in which we have been constructing works under the departments of the dominion government, or the Quebec harbor commissioners, we have always endeavored to conscientiously perform the different works entrusted to us in a proper and workmanlike manner, although some of the works finished by us have been the most difficult ever constructed on the continent, and we are fully convinced that the country has received an honest equivalent for every dollar of public money we ever obtained. Therefore, having full faith in the integrity of our dealings, and wishing to avoid protracted and expensive litigation, we desire to make the following proposition, which we trust you will have the kindness to lay before your colleagues in the government at as early a date as possible. As our standing as contractors and our business reputation as citizens have been seriously affected by the publication alluded to, we desire that a full investigation into the different contracts we have had in hand be instituted by competent engineers, one to be appointed by the government and one by ourselves, these two engineers so appointed to call in a third if deemed necessary, and proceed to a thorough examination of the works referred to; and if after a full and complete investigation of the works mentioned, in accordance with the spirit of the contract and specifications governing the same, it be shown that we ever obtained any moneys to which we were not justly entitled, we are quite ready to make good the full amount of such sum or sums to the last cent, and pay the entire cost of the investigation. If, on the other hand, the engineers' award should be in our favor, and it be shown that the different works referred to have been honestly constructed in accordance with the spirit of the contract and specifications of the same, then, in that case, we expect the government to pay the amount of the award, the entire cost of the investigation, and to recompense us for the damages we have sustained by reason of the publication of the injurious statements alluded to. We have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servants,

N. K. CONNOLLY.
MICHAEL CONNOLLY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Our Council.

KINGSTON, Nov., 25.—(To the Editor): For months the residents of upper Princess street have been striving, under various and repeated discouragements, to get a drain made under the local improvement act. No one opposed the movement. The petition was signed by all the parties interested. The city engineer made his report. The necessary advertising was done. It passed the court of revision. Although the season was far spent, and the petitioners most anxious for a speedy execution of the work it has been persistently neglected.

The chairman of the streets committee instead of giving attention to the business of his department and getting the necessary by-law passed, and having the work expedited prefers to take up the time of the council, boring them and taxing the patience of the people by making a personal attack upon a brother alderman, an attack as silly as it was malicious. Two meetings of the council have passed since all the preliminary work was finished regarding the by-law referred to, and it is still a matter of conjecture when it will be passed and the work commenced. There was ample time to have had this drain finished during the fine weather. Now it will probably be undertaken under the worst possible conditions, with frozen ground, short days and inclement weather, all increasing the necessary cost. This, however, seems to be a matter of indifference to the Sons. The taxpayers must put up with the inconvenience and increased expense, with what grace they may.—RIDEAU.

Consumptives!

Do not give up until you have tried Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, which makes flesh and blood, it is a positive cure for coughs and colds, bronchitis, sore throats, and all lung troubles tending to consumption. Persons have been known to gain from five to ten pounds in weight by taking one bottle of Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, which contains hypophosphites of lime and soda. In big bottles, 50c. and $1. Wade's drug store.

BACK TO THE BEGINNING

A RARE COLLECTION OF FIRST EDITIONS OF DICKENS' WORKS.

Remarkable Library Belonging to a Chicago Bibliophile containing the Earliest Publications of the Stories of the Great Novelist—Many Works Absolutely Unknown to Fame—Curious Sketches and Explanations.

There are few collections of books so small that they cannot boast of a set of Dickens' works. Sets of the companionable stories may be had at prices ranging from $5 to as many thousands. It is perhaps unnecessary to say that there are a few of the latter class. Ordinarily very few people are so interested in a favorite author that they are willing to pay several thousand dollars for the most perfect edition of his works that they may be procured. Still there are cranes of all sorts in bibliomania, and not the rarest is a crane for Dickensiana. There are three complete sets of the first editions of Dickens in Chicago, and there are perhaps as many more in New York. One particularly perfect is owned by a book collector residing on the West Side, who claims to have paid nearly $5,000 for his enthusiasm for the novelist.

WHERE "PICKWICK" WAS BEING WRITTEN.

The fact is that a set of the first editions of Dickens comprises a goodly number of which the average reader of the novels by "Boz" has never heard. We all know "Pickwick" and "Copperfield"; but some of the most expensive of the items in the collection alluded to are works that are trifling and unimportant save to the bibliomaniac.

"For example," says the collector, "here is 'Sunday Under Three Heads,' a pamphlet of forty-nine pages, published in 1836. Dickens wrote it under the nom de plume of Timothy Sparks, and addressed it to the Bishop of London, calling that potentate's attention to the mistakes in London observance of the first day of the week, and suggesting reforms. For this little book 'Phiz,' otherwise H. K. Browne, who illustrated most of Dickens' works, made some woodcuts that are probably the worst he ever did. The book is worthless as literature. I have never read it through, but a copy sells for $100 in the paper covers in which it was printed.

"But if it is worthless as literature, why buy it at such a figure?

"It's plain you are not a book collector," was the reply, a trifle contemptuous. "I had to have it to complete my set; besides it's a curiosity."

Other items of Dickensiana that are rarely heard of are "The Village Coquette," a comic opera, "Is She His Wife?" "The Strange Gentleman," a burlatta, and "The Lamplighter," a farce. These are all very scarce and expensive. The first edition of "The Village Coquette" brings $100 readily and cannot now be bought even at that figure. "The Strange Gentleman" is almost as rare, so rare, in fact, that a fac-simile has been made of it and readily deceives the inexperienced buyer. As for "Is She His Wife?" it is absolutely not to be found in the first edition. Most of the copies were destroyed by the burning of Osgood's old Boston publishing house. A very curious item of these rarities is called "The Loving Ballad of Lord Bateman." This little book has been a theme for dispute among book collectors. For years it was maintained that the humorous notes which furnish a running accompaniment to the cockney version of the old ballad were by Thackeray.

All the evidence, however, goes to show that the writing was Dickens'. George Cruikshank, who made the humorous illustrations of the pamphlet, is authority for the statement that the book is Dickens', and as the novelist and the artist were at swords' points for many years, the latter was unlikely to credit Dickens with anything that was not his due. A good copy of this with the original green covers is worth $60 to $75. It is not only scarce but it is worth having. The text and pictures are highly diverting. The story runs that Cruikshank was in the habit of singing the song to children. Dickens heard it, took down the words, made notes on them, and the artist contributed pictures.

"Sketches of Young Ladies," "Sketches of Young Gentlemen," and "Sketches of Young Couples," are three items that a complete set of first editions of Dickens must not be without. The first is not by Dickens but probably by the Mayhew brothers. Dickens regarded it as a slander upon youthful femininity and wrote a reply "Sketches of Young Gentlemen." First editions of these are worth almost as much as Dickens received for the writing, which is much in the style of his "Sketches by Boz." They are little vest-pocket books that were published, in board covers with some clever etchings by "Phiz."

"I will not weary you by showing you other items of this class. They are not interesting," observed the collector, putting a small volume in its place with the reverential touch of a book lover. "There are 100 volumes and more in that book-case, and probably you never heard of a third of them. The Dickens collector must buy everything that the novelist is known to have written. For example, he edited the first volumes of 'Bentley's Miscellany,' and wrote a few articles for these numbers, which are, therefore, precious to the collector. Did you ever hear of 'Frauds on the Fairies,' 'Proposals for a New Just Book,' 'Whole Hogs,' or 'Public Executions'? These are only a few of the articles by Dickens scattered through the extensive magazine literature of the period. The collector must buy all these magazines if he is properly enthusiastic bibliophile. There are also a goodly number of books for which Dickens wrote prefaces. These must be had. For instance, here is a preface written in 'Infelicia,' a novel by the famous Adah Isaacs Menken, the dashing and beautiful Mazeppa."

"And what are these five little books?"

"Those are five gems, the Christmas stories, 'A Christmas Carol,' 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' 'The Battle of Life,' 'The Chimes,' and 'The Haunted Man.' Each at time was issued with red cloth covers which you see are bound in at the back of the book, which I have had handsomely rebound by the Queen's London binder. This is a custom inaugurated by the British Museum, where the original covers of a publication are always bound with it. In the case of periodical publications like the Dickens' novels the advertisements are always bound in also. Hence collectors do likewise.

"To return to the Christmas books. They are most charming specimens of book making. The illustrations are by some of the best English artists—Clarkson Stanfield, John Tenniel, Doyle, Leech, and others. Look at the colored plates in 'A Christmas Carol,' by John Leech. Nothing could be better in the way of comic illustration. They make no such books in these days, when all illustrations are done by some photo process."

"Your collection of Dickensiana comprises other works besides the writings of the novelist?"

"Several of a biographical nature. For instance, here is Forster's 'Life of Dickens,' the first edition extended from three volumes to nine by the insertion of portraits, autograph letters, play-bills, and other interesting things. 'The Life of Grimaldi,' which was edited by Dickens, has been similarly extended from two volumes to four by the insertion of portraits, autographs, etc."

"Isn't the collection something that you get weary of?"

"Not a bit of it. To me the Dickens books represent an epoch in the history of the English people. Nowhere else will you find such power of description in humor or pathos, such character drawing. They are a better chronicle of the people of England in this century than any dry-as-dust historian could write. And the pictures are a panorama of life and character which is a source of never-ending delight to me."—Chicago Tribune.

SOCIETY DOES NOT ADMIRE THEM.

They are Generally Disagreeable—Require Care and Watching.

It is quite a common thing at the present to meet nervous men and women. They are generally irritable, ill-tempered, sour and repulsive; they bring discredit on themselves; and it is often necessary for their friends to apologize for them, and explain that they are not in their usual health. We strongly maintain that such individuals are a nuisance in general society, and that their presence in social gatherings should be discountenanced and frowned down. The happiness, joy and success of gladsome and intellectual occasions should not be marred or disturbed by irritableness and moroseness, or by unseemly and absurd actions.

It is true indeed that the nervous person is a cause of ceaseless misery to his or her friends. These friends are the first to resent the idea that there exists unsoundness of mind, and a lack of mental ability to properly control the conduct. We strongly maintain that such individuals, who are not able to control their actions, are as bad as some of the insane in our asylums, and require special care and watching.

There is no advantage gained by attempting to conceal the truth. It is well-known by those competent to judge, that such characters as we have described have brought trouble upon themselves and their relatives, by pursuing a line of conduct directly opposed to nature's laws. The large majority of nervous and irritable people are victims of sleeplessness, brooding, morbidness and melancholia. They are generally dyspeptic subjects, in whose body the life stream flows sluggishly. A little trouble was at first neglected, and has now become a mountain. A few doses of Paine's Celery Compound, taken daily a few weeks or a few months ago, would have removed all trouble. Let us assure such individuals that even now their condition is not hopeless while Paine's Celery Compound can be procured. There is no medicine on earth that can so quickly strengthen the nervous system, give strength to the body, tone the digestive organs, give buoyancy of spirits, and a happy and contented disposition, as Paine's Celery Compound. It has renewed the life of many a nervous and disagreeable man and woman, and fitted them to become honored and desired members of society.

The ill condition of a single organ, the liver for instance, may bring on the gravest disorders, which would surely have been obviated by the use of Dr. Sey's Remedy.
