FULL AND "OUT OF SIGHT."

The Moon's Game of Hide and Seek With Old Sol.

Fair Luna played peek-a-boo with Old Sol on Sunday night, and residents in Canada, where the sky was not cloudy as it was in Toronto, could have looked on at the game for hours. It was the first total eclipse visible here for years, and consequently had been looked forward to with much interest.

The pale moon was full, not to speak disrespectfully, and she dodged behind the earth at half-past four o'clock, that is the penumbral shadow, although she did not rise until a quarter to five o'clock. At 6:37 she was entirely within the dark central shadow and so continued until 8 o'clock. The shadow entirely disappeared at 10:01.

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON AND EXPLANATION.

The above cut, from the Sidereal Messenger, throws some light on this dark subject. A glance at the cut shows at what point of the moon's limb the shadow first began to cover her. The first contact was at A. D. and indicated the last point of the moon to be covered as it entered wholly within the shadow. C. marks the points which first emerged from the shadow at the end of totality, and B, the point which was last to leave the umbra. For a few minutes after this the penumbral shadow was still visible, but this faded out long before the end of the eclipse.

The moon is very interesting this month. Inprimis, the November moon came it promptly with the first day of the month, and this early appearance admits of another new moon on the last day of the month; thus giving us the somewhat unusual number of five phases for the calendar month.

In the next place Madame, our consort, having already been in conjunction with Mercury, and having paid her compliments to Venus and to the sun on the 15th, will indulge in three more conjunctions before her exit.

Struck in the Windpipe.

SPOKANE FALLS, Wash., Nov. 27.—A sad and peculiar accident occurred at the Franklin public school yesterday, by which Eugene Bollock, a 6-year-old son of Max Bollock, lost his life. Several boys were engaged in the game called "zipsticks," a pastime popular in the noon hour. The game is played with two sticks. One about five inches long, sharpened at each end, is placed in a hole made in the ground and one end of it is struck by the longer stick, causing it to fly in the air, and the trick is to strike it before it reaches the ground. This game was being played as usual to-day by some of the larger boys. Little Eugene was just returning from his noon lunch when the stick was struck by one of the boys, and in flying it struck him in the windpipe. The little fellow walked a few steps and fell. When picked up there was a small blue spot on the throat and he was unable to speak. Within 30 minutes he was dead.
