KIND WORDS.

Taken From the Whig's Generous Contemporaries on Its Golden Wedding.

(A Belleville Printer.)

"The general contents and appearance of the paper are very creditable and you are to be congratulated."

(Almonte Gazette.)

"Last Monday was the fiftieth birthday of our excellent contemporary, the Kingston WHIG, and the occasion was celebrated by the issue of a 12-page edition."

(Brockville Recorder.)

"Monday's edition of the Kingston WHIG, the semi-centennial number, is a credit to its publishers and would certainly make a pleasing gift to absent friends."

(Gananoque Reporter.)

"The Kingston WHIG celebrated its 50th anniversary by issuing a handsome special number on Monday last. It was in 8 vo style, and contained a large amount of information concerning its early history and that of the city."

(Picton Gazette.)

"The semi-centennial number of the Kingston WHIG was an excellent number, containing a large amount of valuable and interesting information. The WHIG ranks as one of the best exchanges on our table."

(Brockville Times.)

"The Kingston WHIG completed its fiftieth year of existance on Monday. It came out in a new and greatly improved form on that day and indulged to a considerable extent in retrospective. May the next fifty years deal as well with our valued contemporary as the last have done."

(Woodstock Review.)

"The semi-centennial number of the BRITISH WHIG, is a most creditable production. On its first page is a portrait of Dr. Barker, its founder, with an interesting biographical sketch and history of the journal. The WHIG is one of the oldest of Canadian papers. Under its present editor, E. J. Barker Pense, it is ably conducted."

(Toronto Globe.)

"The Kingston WHIG on Monday issued its semi-centennial number, and freshened its vigorous old age with many stirring recollections of the days of its youth. This paper is a valuable historical review, and among other interesting features contains a portrait and biographical sketch of the WHIG's founder, Dr. Barker, now in his 85th year."

(Napanee Express.)

"Last week the WHIG published a large and handsome semi-centennial edition containing a portrait of Dr. Barker, the founder, with biographical sketch and a history of the journal from its inception to the present time, together with reminiscences of Kingston's early days. The number was highly creditable to the ability and enterprise of the proprietor Mr. Pense and his efficient staff."

(Goderich Signal.)

"The Kingston WHIG has just celebrated its semi-centennial anniversary. The paper is now one of the best managed in the province, and we feel very kindly towards our venerable but active contemporary, for on it we spent many a day of our apprenticeship. The picture of the patriarchal editor, Dr. Barker, brings to our remembrance many a forcible article, written in an execrable hand, which it was our duty to "set up" in days of yore."

(Picton Times.)

"The Kingston WHIG published a very interesting, and typographically beautiful "semi-centennial number" last week. It gives a history of journalism in the Midland district. An appropriate feature of the number is a portrait of Dr Barker, who founded the WHIG and is still living, in his 86th year. In addition it gives portraits of Queen Victoria, Princess Louise, Lord Dufferin, the Marquis of Lorne, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Hon. Mr. Gladstone and Sir John A. Macdonald."

(Lindsay Post.)

"The WHIG celebrated its semi-centennial on Monday by a double number, giving some interesting and well-written sketches of the last half century. The WHIG at fifty years is vigorous and hearty as if it had bathed in the fountain of youth, and its admirable and enterprising collocation of local news and able editorial comment make it highly prized in its constituency. We wish its enterprising proprietor, E. J. B. Pense, a grandson of old Dr. Barker, abundant and continued prosperity."

(Guelph Mercury.)

"On New Year's day the Kingston WHIG reached its semi-centennial, and celebrated the auspicious event by issuing a most interesting sheet, full of reminiscences. Its founder, Dr Barker, is still living, though in feeble health, and he retired from active journalistic work some years ago. The paper is now vigorously conducted by his grandson, E. J. Barker Pense, and it shows every evidence that during the second half of the century it will be even more prosperous than it has been during the first fifty years of its existence."

(Stratford Beacon.)

"The semi-centennial number of the Kingston WHIG was a perfect gem in its way. It gave some interesting sketches of the history of journalism in Cadada, as well as a great deal of the local history of Kingston and vicinity. Very appropriately, it contained a fine portrait of Dr. Barker, the founder of the WHIG, now in his 85th year, and hale and hearty. It has for some years been conducted by his grandson, E. J. B. Pense, a clever journalist, who has made the WHIG one of the very best papers in the country."

(Perth Courier.)

"The BRITISH WHIG last week celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, it having been established at the Limestone City, in January, 1834, by Dr. Barker, who is yet a hale veteran of some eighty years. The WHIG is yet full of life and vigor, and wields an influence not surpassed by many of its daily contemporaries in the province. It may not generally be known that the fiftieth birthday of the Courier is due this year, it having been started in our then young town by the late Hon. Malcolm Cameron, in the fall of 1834."

(Ottawa Free Press.)

"Last Monday, the fiftieth anniversary of its birth, the Kingston WHIG published a twelve-page edition. It is a very interesting number of a journal whose history has been happily identified with the progress of Liberal ideas in Canada. When we think of the great events embraced in that period and the active honorable share taken in them by the WHIG, we feel that something more than mere congratulation is due to so distinguished a journal. The WHIG still continues to do good service to the popular cause, to liberty and enlightenment, and has our warmest wishes for its prosperity."

(Port Hope Times.)

"The Kingston WHIG celebrated its fiftieth anniversary last week by issuing a semi-centennial number, in which was contained a sketch of itself in particular and journalism in general, a history of Kingston during the past fifty years; portraits of the Queen and Princess Louise, the founder of the paper, the present and three previous Governors-General, Right Hons. W. E. Gladstone and John A. Macdonald. The paper is a very creditable, though no doubt an expensive one, and the grandson of the original founder has reason to be proud of his enterprise."

(Port Hope Guide.)

"On Thursday the Kingston WHIG celebrated its jubilee anniversary by a twelve-page, six-column edition. It is a very interesting number of a journal with half a century existence. We congratulate friend Pense on the important event. There are several articles giving the history of the early days of this country, in all of which we notice one important omission. The Port Hope Guide commenced its publication two years before the WHIG,—in 1831. Wm. Furby started the New Telegraph, which a few years later was changed to the Guide. We trust the WHIG will amend its history of the press and place the Guide among the pioneer papers of this country."

R. & J. GARDINER

(Christian Guardian.)

"The Kingston BRITISH WHIG issued its semi-centennial number last week. It is four years younger than the Guardian, and was started in 1833 by Dr. Barker, who for thirty-eight years remained at its head, after having guided its destinies with a spirit and perseverance that made his best success well merited. When the WHIG was first issued, by one "almost a stranger to the people of Kingston" it was by many predicted, to go down in the sea of Upper Canadian journalism, but it has sailed in safety through the anxious storms of the rebellion into the haven of old age. The WHIG still maintains a vigorous existence under the management of its present able and courteous editor, Mr. E. J. B. Pense."

(Peterboro Examiner.)

"Last Monday the BRITISH WHIG, Kingston, issued its semi-centennial number, that journal having completed the fiftieth year of publication. The special issue is a finely printed twelve-page sheet, full as usual of current news, as well as a large amount of special matter, chiefly reminiscences of matters of journalistic interest. The first page contains a portrait of Dr. Barker, the venerable founder, now in the 85th year of his age. The paper is still in the family, being owned by his grandson, Mr. E. J. Barker Pense. The WHIG is a really wide-awake journal that publishes news, and it is a fine, thrifty sample of a well-conducted and live newspaper. If we might take the liberty, with so venerable a confrere, we wish the WHIG continued prosperity for at least another half century."

(Belleville Ontario.)

"Monday's edition of the DAILY BRITISH WHIG of Kingston was a semi-centennial number of twelve pages and forms a very interesting special issue. The first page is enriched with a portrait of the venerable Dr. Barker, the founder of the paper, now in his 85th year. The WHIG is still in the family, as it is energetically conducted by E. J. B. Pense, Dr. Barker's grandson, assisted by a very efficient staff. A great deal of its present prosperity is due to the Managing Editor, Robert Meek. Among the contributors to this special number are J. B. Ashley, late editor of the Ontario, and E. Myles, of this city. The WHIG is a good newspaper and a firm advocate of anything touching the true interests of Kingston. We congratulate our contemporary on its success and wish it another fifty years of prosperity."

(Rochester Herald.)

"The BRITISH WHIG has attained the dignity of a semi-centenarian, and duly celebrated the occasion last Monday by the issue of a daily sheet of twelve pages, containing much interesting information regarding early newspaper struggles in Canada. The WHIG was the first daily in Upper Canada, and for several years was the only one in existence. Its first proprietor and editor, Dr. Barker, still lives at the ripe age of eighty-five years, and it must be a source of pride to him that his grandson, the present proprietor, is making so good a paper. A portrait of Dr. Barker fitly adorns the first page of the special number, and sketches of different editors are given. The WHIG is an excellent Canadian exchange, and is to be congratulated on the fact that its advancing years result in no deterioration in vigor."

(Berlin News.)

"The Kingston WHIG issued its semi-centennial number on Monday, and enters up on its 51st volume. It is one of our most welcome exchanges, partly because of its excellence as a paper, and partly because of the very high esteem in which we hold its publisher, E. J. B. Pense. While it comes out as an earnest Reform paper it displays considerably more than an ordinary amount of independence in the discussion of public questions. At any rate it is an honorable exception to the class of Grit journals, whose editors apparently think that the amount of bread and butter they get is in proportion to the amount of scurrility, slander and personal abuse they can get into their columns. We wish the WHIG continued success and hope the present publisher may live to see it complete its centennial number."

(Cobourg World.)

"We are interested in observing that our ably-conducted contemporary, the Kingston WHIG, has just celebrated its "jubilee." Do you believe it? Why, to look at the dear old fellow who is running it, one would conclude that he was on the pleasant side of 35, and remarkably well preserved at that,—to say nothing of the years of his youth, before he took hold. But stop. We see it stated that the paper was started fifty years ago by somebody else. And here comes in another illustration of the old adage, of the benefit of having a grandfather. Well, in any case, the paper is a remarkably lively one for its age, and we wish our friend Pense continued success in carrying on the great work which has come into his hands. By the way,—in a couple of months, the Cobourg World will be 20 years old,—we having started it, (when quite a young man,) in the Spring of 1854. What kind of a celebration do they have on such an occasion?—A tin wedding, or something, isn't it? We intend to reach for it, whatever it may be."

(Letter from Rochester, N.Y.)

To the Editor of the British Whig.

DEAR SIR—Permit me to thank you for your kindly mention of myself among others as being associated in Kingston local journalism, and thereby helping to build up the fair fame of the city in which I passed so many pleasant years of my life and for which I will always cherish a warm affection. I congratulate you most heartily on the auspicious event which your admirably compiled paper celebrates—the semi-centenary of the founding of the BRITISH WHIG. Such an event in Canada has been of rare occurrence, and ought therefore to be a cause of rejoicing to the proprietor of the paper that has attained so venerable an age. In my own journalistic career in Kingston, I had many warm personal friends on the staff of the WHIG, beginning with the veteran founder, Dr. Barker. Permit me to refer to a few of them. My first friend on a Kingston newspaper was E. H. Collins, then on the News, whose excellent reports of cricket matches and other sports were favorably received. Mr Sangster I also became acquainted with on the News, and he moved to Ottawa shortly after I went to Kingston. Of more recent WHIG men I mention my warm friend, the late W. H. Fuller, whose biting and sarcastic pen made the "tories squirm," as he used to express it. I used to enjoy his editorials very much indeed, although I did not like his politics, which in those days I thought detestable. Then came gentle J. B. Ashley, who always was a gentleman under whatever circumstances he was found. I rejoice exceedingly in his good fortune. Next was my dear and much lamented friend, William Tandy, whose premature departure is so sincerely mourned by all who knew him, and by none more than by myself. I have on a previous occasion written of Mr. Tandy, but I cannot refrain on this occasion from saying that of all the editors of the WHIG in the past I know of none whose versatility was as great as his. As a singer, as a preacher, as political speaker, as a writer of terse and vigorous English, he had few superiors. Of the present staff of the WHIG I needn't say anything. My relations with Mr. Meek have always been warm, ever since I knew him, a young printer on the Daily News many years ago. I need say nothing about him or Mr. Elliott, whose work has been excellent. Wishing the WHIG still further success, I am yours faithfully, D.G.M.
