The Cricket's Violin.

BY LAURA F. HINSDALE.

"Ah, me! Ah, me!" a cricket said,
Grandmother Gray has gone to bed:
No one listens but little Fred
To all the tunes I play;
So I will hop away."

"I'll climb the chimney, and begin
To play my dulcet violin.
Too long I've waited; 'tis a sin
For Genius thus to stay
Hid from the light of day!"

Poor little Fred began to moan:
"Grandmother Gray, the cricket 's gone
And you and I are left alone!"
Alas! I fear," he said,
"The summer time is dead!"

With many a weary hop-hop-hop
The cricket reached the chimney-top.
But, ah! the people did not stop!
None heard in all the din
The cricket's violin.

The cricket played in every key,
From do, fa, la, to do, re, mi;
From a, b, c, to x, y, z,
He played both slow and fast.—
The heedless crowd went past.

Jack Frost came 'round and nipped his bow,
And then the music was so low,
The cricket cried in tone of woe:
"Oh, for the hearthstone bed,
The ears of little Fred!"

A Train Delayed by Antelopes.

The west-bound train between Green River and Granger, on the Union Pacific, recently encountered a herd of 1200 or 1500 antelopes. The snow was quite deep, and drifted in places, and the antelopes were running on the roadbed, finding that the easiest to travel in. When they were first encountered many of them were killed, and the engineer, seeing at once that the train might be derailed unless it were slowed up, decreased the speed. The antelopes kept a short distance ahead of the engine, and were strung along the road for a quarter of a mile. They would occasionally get some distance from the engine, and then they would stop, turn round and watch the headlight until the engine was fairly upon them. They delayed the train half or three-quarters of an hour.—Elko (Nev.) Independent.

Noah's Ark.

Some Turkish commissioners appointed to investigate the question of avalanches on Mount Ararat suddenly came upon a gigantic structure of very dark wood protruding from a glacier. They made enquiries of the inhabitants. They had seen it for six years, but had been afraid to approach it because a spirit of fierce aspect had been seen looking out of the upper window. Turkish commissioners, however, are bold men, not deterred by such trifles, and they determined to reach it. Situated as it was among the fastnesses of one of the glens of Mount Ararat, it was a work of enormous difficulty, and it was only after incredible hardships that they succeeded.

The ark was in a good state of preservation, although the angles had been a good deal broken in its descent. There was an Englishman present who had presumably read his Bible, and he saw it was made of the ancient gopher wood, which everyone knows grows only on the plains of the Euphrates.

Effecting an entrance to the vessel, which was painted brown, they found that the admiralty requirements for the conveyance of horses had been carried out, and the interior was divided into partitions fifteen feet high. Into three of these only could they get, the others being full of ice, and how far the ark extended into the glacier they could not tell. If, however, on being uncovered it turns out to be eight hundred cubits long it will go hard with the misbelievers in the book of Genesis. "Needless to say," says an English paper, "an American was soon on the spot, and negotiations have since been entered into with the local pasha for its speedy transfer to the United States."

How a Proverb Originated.

Albert Durer is more famous and more widely known as an engraver than as a painter. His first copper-plate engraving was made in 1497, and from that time he executed numerous works of this kind. One of the first of these was "St. Jerome's Penance," a good impression of which was sold a few years ago for five hundred dollars. In 1498 Durer published his first series of wood-cuts illustrating the Apocalypse of St. John. These cuts marked a new era in wood-engraving, and showed what possibilities it contained. Before this time it had been a rude art, chiefly used by uneducated monks.

There are one hundred and seventy-four wood-cuts attributed to Durer. The other important series are the "Great and Little Passion," showing the sufferings of Christ, and the "Life of the Virgin." He often chose such scenes as remind us only of death, sorrow and sin. Again, his grotesque and fantastic humor was shown; and nothing more wild and unusual could be imagined than some of his fancies which he made almost immortal through his great artistic power. A wood-cut called the "Triumphal Arch of Maximilian" is two and a half feet high and nine feet wide; it was composed of ninety-two blocks, and all the remarkable events in the Emperor's life are illustrated in it, as well as many symbolical figures and pictures expressive of his praise, nobility and power.

It is said that, while this engraving was being finished by the engraver Rosch, the Emperor drove often to see it. On one occasion several of Rosch's pet cats ran into the presence of the sovereign, and from this incident rose the proverb, "A cat may look at a king."

Durer's time was an interesting one in the history of Europe, or, we may say, of the world. He was born twenty-one years before Columbus discovered America. In his day, too, Vasco di Gama sailed the southern seas; Copernicus wrote of his observations and discoveries, and all Europe was deeply agitated by the preaching of the Reformation by Martin Luther. Men of thought and power were everywhere discussing great questions; the genius of invention was active; the love of the beautiful was indulged, and the general wealth and prosperity of Europe supported the artists, and encouraged them to strive for greater attainments.—St. Nicholas.

The days of King Mercury are numbered. Calomel, the shot and shell, under the old system of treatment, is happily now almost discarded. Vegetable concentrations have proved of greater value in the treatment of disease, and it is important that the sick should use only such remedies as are entirely free from mineral admixtures. Hamilton's Vegetable Pills of Mandrake and Butternut are entirely vegetable in composition, and we advise a trial to all who find it necessary to use a mild, prompt and effectual purgative medicine. INSURANCE DIFFICULTY.

Mr. John Patton's Respects to Captain Gardener—The Permit Business all Over Again.

The Editor, British Whig.

Sir—I have no desire to answer any more correspondence. Captain Gardener is allowing himself to be made a cats-paw in the hands of somebody of literary merit no doubt; and while it may be very true that the Captain will subscribe to any and everything that has for its object to damage our Company and satisfy the peculiar prejudices of rival agents I now say once and for all that everything I stated in my communication of the 9th inst., is substantially correct.

Scribblers may garble clause 5 of our policy as much as they please, but the public will not believe them as long as I have an opportunity to expose the falsehoods and unmask the sophistry. I will here give the clause that has so often been misconstrued:

"No person shall engage as a mariner without the consent of the Company, signed by their President or Vice President and Manager."

Now my contention is that a permit signed by the President, and under the corporate seal of the Co., is quite sufficient. I am not alone in this. A friend of mine consulted Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., on the subject. His reply was in the affirmative. Such high authority should be reliable. Now such permits were given our worthy clients, and though not acceptable in every respect to them were really legal. Still they were retained by these gentlemen till the close of navigation and in force before its opening, as the books of the Custom House fully attest. The third permits were issued by the Company before the expiry of the first, &c., signed and sealed as before. Had either of these gentlemen been drowned during the season there is not a court of law or equity in the Dominion but would enforce the payment of such claim should the Company try to contest it. What would be thought of a man who would order a suit of clothes from a merchant tailor and stipulate to pay a legitimate price for them on condition of their fitting. The tailor tries his hand firstly to make a good fit but fails. He tries secondly and fails. The third and last time he succeeds. The buyer gives his note as payment in full, drawn at six months. At the expiration of the time the merchant demands his money. The maker of the note says "No, I'll return you the clothes on condition of your returning me my note." Do you suppose the merchant would comply with such unreasonable demands? Surely not. He would very naturally say, "This is not business."

Now, Mr. Editor, I wish to say that the bargain made by Messrs. McDonald and Gardner with our Company is similar to the foregoing. The Company carried the risks of these men for nearly a year, and it is worthy of note that both retained their respective policies as well as permits until the Company demanded payment. Then, of course, they refuse to pay their notes, when no dangers threaten nor fears of shipwreck disturb their peaceful breasts. A word more to our classical critic and I have done, and I might here say,

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well.

This simple Simon who went a fishing for to catch a whale appears to have the power to magnify all the little fish into whales. Simon appears to me to be a perfect braggart in his way. Hear him: "I fear not to tackle you even in the hieroglyphical cuniform inscriptions on the Babylonish bricks." Wonderful!!! The advice given by the wild cat to the fox is' apropos.' This Simon pure appears also to have permit on the brain; he must run short of words in our English vocabulary, for every sentence commences almost with permit until he tells us his timbers are shivered. No wonder, for they are not made of oak, but poplar, consequently they are rotten-hearted.

He speaks also of my dog Latin, while his opening sentence is a specimen of the same, and so throughout his rambling and vituperative slang that's as disjointed in construction as illogical in sense. Look at the nice selection of words he uses: "Shiver my timbers," "called pusson," "nigger," etc. These are a few of the classic phrases used by this profoundly educated gentleman, who has been employed, forsooth, as a penny-a-line writer for Mr. Gardner. His conduct in the matter is like a well-known fish, described by naturalists as having two eyes, both on the same side, consequently it only looks on one side. Our learned critic imitates this fish very much, as he appears only to look on one side of the question under discussion, and that is on the side of Gardner & Co. against the Ontario Mutual. "Permit" me now to summarize a few of the falsehoods formulated against our Company and Agents by this learned critic:

1. That Captain McDonald was a consenting party to the first communication is false.

2. That Mr. Burrows offered a very large discount to Captain McDonald for his note, if he would come quietly to the Ontario trough, is also untrue.

3. That Mr. B. said the points were not worth the paper they were written is also untrue.

4. That I stultified myself in vituperative bathos is also false.

5. That our policies state that permits are utterly invalid unless signed by the President and Manager. This is a garbled statement and unworthy of credence.

6. That I have a country schoolmaster assistant is also untrue. I use my own armour.

Captain Gardner has not yet weathered Scylla
With all his nautical skill;
The absent danger greater still appears
And less he fears, who's near the thing he fears.

As to the great flourish he makes over the phrase Nusquam tuta fides in calling on the "Shades of Cicero," any school boy could interpret without the aid of a lexicon which this learned critic tells us is used in translating Latin. Oh, my country! When it is remembered that I placed full confidence in the promise Mr. Gardner made me Re payment of note, I am unable to see that the application of the above quoted phrase is a misnomer. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space to defend a cause which has been misrepresented and to uphold an institution that will live and continue to prevail when its enemies shall have passed away like shadows over the rocks and leave not one trace behind.—Yours truly,

J. PATTON,
General Agent.

Kingston, Feb. 21st, 1884.

[This dicussion now must end. It has ceased to have the slightest public interest.—ED.]

EXPENSIVE PETS.

Pattie's Fondness for Birds—The Pets She Leaves Behind Her When She Travels.

It was during Madame Patti's recent [illegible] the city that a Tribune reporter [illegible] to be in a bird store on [illegible] just above Twenty-third street. He was watching a blue and red macaw with a malign expression and a damaged tail, who was trying to crack his partner's head, using his vicious-looking beak as the nut-crackers do. Suddenly a voice in accents by no means sweet cried in his ear, "Kiss me! Kiss me quick!" The reporter turned round at the graceless invitation, and saw a gray parrot with a red head trying to commit capital punishment on himself with the bars of his handsome cage. He looked a virtuous and high-minded bird, and the last in the world to have made any remark of such a nature. But the placid bird man remarked, "That was Ben Butler." The reporter started, and instinctively assumed an attitude of defence. "Oh don't be alarmed," said Mr. Holden, "it's a bird;" and he pointed to the gray and red parrot, who had quit strangling himself, and was hanging upside down and making frantic efforts to feed himself so as to chew his own tail feathers.

"It belongs to Patti," continued the proprietor, "who bought him from us a month or two ago. She bought another at the same time, and gave us $500 for one and $800 for the other, so you can see for yourself they are good birds. Ben Butler, in especial, has the choicest of vocabularies, and when he once begins to talk there is no knowing what he will say before he gets through."

"Is Madame Patti fond of birds?"

"I should smile. She buys from us every season, and I understand has quite an aviary at her place in Wales."

"Why does she leave Ben behind her, then?"

"Oh, she always sends them to us when she is travelling. While she is in town they never leave her night or day, and she cares for them entirely herself. But she is afraid to take them with her when she leaves, and sends them to us. Herr Rodenwald comes in nearly every day, and has a talk with the birds, and then telegraphs to Patti what they have said. Queer, isn't it? But then you know women have a right to be queer, and when they get $5,000 a night for singing they can be particularly queer, and it's all right."

By this time Mr. Butler had got tired of mistreating his tail, and was sitting bolt upright like a decoratively solemn owl, and as the reporter bade him good-by he gravely ejaculated: "I'm awful dry. Won't you stand me a drink?"

But the reporter did not.

THE FOX AND THE HEN.

A Fable with many Morals.

"How big a brood shall you have this year, madam?" said the Fox to the Hen, one cold winter evening in the barn yard.

"What's that to you?" said the Hen to the Fox.

"Supper!" replied the Fox, promptly.

"Well, I don't know," said the Hen, in reply; "I may have ten; but I never count my chickens before they are hatched."

"Quite right," said the Fox, "neither do I; and, as a hen in the present is worth ten chickens in the future, I will eat you now." So saying, he carried her off.

The next morning the farmer, seeing the tracks of the fox in the snow, took his gun and went out and shot him. "Alas!" said the Fox, "I should have waited for the ten chickens; there is no snow in summer time.—St. Nicholas Almanac.

CHEAP FUEL

THE RATHBUN COMPANY

Claims that MILL WOOD is the cheapest fuel either for summer or winter that can be purchased.

1st. It is longer than Cordwood.
2nd. It has three straight sides, thus piling very close.
3rd. It is easily cut and don't need much splitting.

The best way according to the experience of those who use it most is to keep a quantity on hand and mix with hard wood in extremely cold weather, then as the weather moderates use only enough hardwood to keep the fire from going out. You can always let your fire down pretty low, while you have dry mill wood to revive it when needed. The first fire in the morning and the last fires at night ought always to be mill wood. A little watchfulness and practice will convince any person that the RATHBUN'S are right.
