AMONG THE IRON MINES.

Kingston & Pembroke Railway—Rugged and Picturesque Scenery—Caldwell-M'Laren.

(Special Correspondence.)

The Kingston & Pembroke Railway, upon which I took the Saturday evening train from Kingston for the iron fields of North Lanark, is one of the roads which owes its existence almost entirely to the iron mines as the latter owe their development to the Railway. It is true that the opening of the considerable area of agricultural land to the north of Kingston, and the advantages to be gained by a short route to Pembroke on the Upper Ottawa, had much to do with the projection of this road, but at the same time the possibilities of drawing a large traffic in iron ore to the Limestone City, and perhaps there converting it into marketable iron, was never forgotten by the promoters of the road. Look from the very beginning, they, at least, had an eye on the wooing of partial ownership in the mines, several of which are in fact practically in the hands of the railway company. The road has thus served a double purpose, and even apart from the profits accruing from the ownership of mines, has, by traffic alone, proved a very profitable undertaking. It is a go-as-you-please monopoly, and the rather thinly settled district through which it runs cannot yet induce competition, and must therefore be thankful that any kind of train service is afforded. After all there is a charm in it.

INSECURITY OF THE TRAIN SERVICE

on this road; it is a relief from the rail and square methods which are affected on most railways. There is little pretence of running the trains on time, and if a passenger arrives at his destination a couple of hours late it is a contingency foreseen and not disappointing, while if he gets through half an hour ahead of time he not only forgives the delinquencies of the train, but experiences a satisfaction he never knows on our larger railways. I have known both experiences on this line, and rather admire—in a way—the management which thus succeeds in taking the protest against the conventional regularity of nineteenth century business methods. Our train started not very far from the proper hour, and though hooked to reach the next station in ten minutes, stood half an hour on the main track for some reason which the passengers could not guess. The stoppage didn't provoke a remark from anyone. For thirty miles or more we lost further time by little delays, and then in the last part of the trip the train made a spurt, and reached of Mississippi station, 61 miles north of Kingston, not over half an hour late. Besides irregularity, the road has other pleasing features. The cars generally are picturesquely dark and dingy, and whether from the kind of springs under them or the character of the roadway, they swing backwards, forwards, sideways, and otherwise in a way no earthquake has ever been known to surpass, while the car, bumping up and down like a lumber waggon, affords an agreeable change from the tiresome monotony of riding in the smoothly running railway coaches of other railways. Moreover, a wholesome degree of economy, rivalling that of John Gilpin's frugal wife, is exhibited in the size of the railway station. Most of them I have seen are little wooden shanties, some not over ten feet square. In the majority of the stationmasters a similar thrift is exhibited, at least at the stations on the upper part of the road, the stationmaster at the important station at the Mississippi receiving the handsome remuneration of $10 a month. The road, however, is not unpopular, for the trainmen are very civil and obliging, and in turn are courteously treated by the Superintendent and management generally. Whether from economical or higher motives, there are no regular ticket-pickers employed to play spy on the conductors. One of the latter said to me, "I like it; a man feels that he is trusted, and therefore works for the Company's interests as he would not if he felt that his superiors thought it necessary to watch him constantly."

THE BANKS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mississippi Village, a Kingstonian let me to believe, was a brisk little place of 800 inhabitants. Arriving after dark, it seemed to be every appearance of a considerable village. Later, enquiring for a store, the answer was "You will find one down at the corner." Instead of a block of buildings, a block of rock—in a fracture in one corner of which the little wooden store nestled—was intended. Next morning completely dissipated all previous impressions that Mississippi was a bona fide village. What had seemed in the darkness like buildings were found to be rocks, and the village displayed but half a dozen houses, the hotel, a boarding house, the post office, the corner store, the railway station house, and a shanty. There are only thirty inhabitants all told. Mississippi is picturesquely situated. It stands on a ledge or little hollow, half way up the rock escarpment on the south side of the Mississippi valley. To the north of this the ground slopes to the broad valley. In other directions great hills and rocks look down. Through a gap to the east a deep ravine lies beyond the corner store, and behind it rises a steep lofty ridge, locally known as "the mountain." The steep rock face is a favourite scene after dark for the climbing exploits of the train men, and keen contests are engaged in, the man who first gains the summit waving his lantern as a signal to the time keepers at the hotel.

Sunday is a quiet day at Mississippi. The miners, lumbermen, and farmers resorting hither in large numbers from the thinly settled country for miles around are all home. There are no churches here, not in any religious service held regularly. Occasionally a theological student arrives from Kingston and preaches in one of the railway coaches, where almost the whole population assemble to hear him. The hotel, a comfortable frame building, of good size is owned by the railway company and given rent free to the occupant, who enjoys his free lease on condition of keeping the place respectably.

A FINE LANDSCAPE.

In the afternoon, with one of my fellow sojourners at the hotel, I climbed the bluff to obtain a glimpse at the country round. What seemed a task of ten minutes proved a long one. The snow was deep and screen to the foot of the rock wall difficult, and over these the ascent formidable. With many slips we made our way up on hands and knees by the aid of rock edges, logs, and the shrubs growing out of the crevices, reaching the top after nearly an hour's climb. We were well rewarded by the view of an extensive landscape, which even in its winter dress was uncommonly fine. The shades of evening were falling, however, and from the dull grey line first flakes of a new storm were descending, so that even with the aid of a field glass the details of the view were indistinct. Behind us, southward, the hill rose gently sloping up to a line of hardwood bush; in front lay the valley of the Mississippi, two miles wide, and winding between a border of mountains on either hand. The little village lay beneath us to the left, its houses sparkling with the evening lamps, and its rocky surroundings appearing as one the broken places in the long line of river bluffs. Deep, narrow ravines here and there wound in from the valley between the hills and the rock walls, and beyond the distant rival bluffs across the valley, hill after hill, streaked and spotted with wood and snow covered clearing, till ten or twelve miles away the undulating line of the forest closed the view. Houses were few and far between, only a light here and there at distant intervals sparkled through the dark to indicate the little shanty of the solitary settler in the bush. Our descent was more rapid than our climb, sitting, or rather lying down on our backs, feet foremost, we slide twenty feet at a time, clutching at the shrubs as we passed to prevent a rapid descent that might shoot us over the edge of little precipices that broke the steep incline of the ridge. An hour and three quarters was consumed in what had beforehand seemed an excursion of fifteen minutes.

FARMING AND LUMBERING.

Bluffs such as this are common features in this beautiful, but almost uninhabitable country. Farms here are very scattered, the bush continuing for miles together, some times in great areas of beech, maple, elm, and other hardwood trees, sometimes in pine groves, and more frequently in woods of pine, hemlocks, cedars and hardwood. For so rocky a soil, in which patches of good land five acres in extent are by no means common, the sturdy character of the timber (average size) the trees are as thick and tall as in the most fertile parts of the Province, and vegetation generally is but little less luxuriant. Good farming land is not far away, the borders of a rocky but almost continuously cultivated country lie within ten miles to the eastward. Farming there, however, is not, generally speaking, in a very prosperous condition, but the extension of dairying is effecting a general improvement in the wealth of the people. In this neighbourhood of the Mississippi the woods have been cleared of most of the best pine timber, and the numerous gangs of shantymen are now making a fresh clearing, which will be complete within a few years.

Lumbering is still

THE GREAT INDUSTRY.

Mr. P. McLaren's great timber mills and big slide, now historically famous, are six miles East of the Mississippi station. Mr. McLaren holds both sides of the river below here and the South side for a long distance up. Mr. Caldwell's limits are up a stream on the North bank and backwards over a long distance to the Madawaska. The improvements made by Mr. McLaren are scattered here and there along the stream at intervals of two or three to eight or ten miles. The immense lumbering business carried on by these two firms furnishes the chief support of the widely scattered storekeepers and farmers of this section, and many of the latter have been or are still lumbermen. The lumber bounty was their first introduction to life in the woods, and it is there many still resort with their teams in winter to add to their somewhat scanty earnings from the farms. When the lumbering business is dull, the farmer here unable to find a profitable market for his produce, suffers to a degree farmers in the fertile parts of Ontario can not know. When the lumbering ceases, as it must before many years, many a clearing will be deserted, and its occupant will seek another occupation or take up prairie land. The development of the rich mines of this section may check the exodus of farmers, but it scarcely be expected that for a long time to come it will afford as large or as profitable a market for cattle and farm produce as the lumber shanties have of late years.

A CAUSE CELEBRE.

So many being personally interested in the rumour operations of Messrs McLaren and Caldwell, the celebrated suit is a common topic of conversation here, where almost every one is familiar with the river, the slides, and the character of the lumbering operations carried on on its waters. I was surprised to find that the stream which Sir John Macdonald had stated was a "small brook flowing into the Upper Ottawa," and which several Conservative speakers and newspapers have represented as a creek not over twenty feet wide in the portion of its course under dispute, is a comparatively large river.

I crossed it a mile and a quarter from here, at a place which, on account of the excessive contraction of the stream, is called "The Narrows." It appears to be about two hundred feet in width. The depth, I was told, was from six to eight feet. Above and below "The Narrows" the width is much greater, and without an exception the shantymen I have conversed with hereabouts who have traversed the stream say there is not a narrower place for fifty miles above. The depth, they say, is rarely less than six to eight feet, and is not unfrequently forty. As to how far the obstructions would interfere with the floating of timber were there no slides on the river the opinions of men who practically know the river do not differ materially, though I spoke with shantymen and ex-shantymen who had worked for one or the other or for both parties to the suit. The stream is considered floatable in its worst places, but precautions at these places must be taken to guard against jams, occasioned by rocks distributed irregularly in the stream. They say, moreover, that in only one or two places are slides necessary to avoid serious inconvenience, and that these slides were built at little cost. The extraordinary assertions of the newspapers as to the vast sums expended by Mr. McLaren in improvements, with one which Mr. Caldwell could not use the stream, are received with mingled surprise and merriment by these practical men, who by spending many yearsalong the stream have acquired a perfect familiarity with its every feature. Here Mr. Caldwell is looked upon as an injured party, and Mr. McLaren's action is considered but an one move in the direction of acquiring Mr. Caldwell's limits on the Mississippi, for if the latter cannot use the stream he might relinquish his limits rather than incur the expense of hauling his logs twenty, thirty, and even forty miles in order to reach the Madawaska or its nearest tributaries.

RELIEVES IN PARADISE.

What "A Thinker" Finds in Scripture to Betoken an Intermediate State.

The Editor, British Whig.

SIR,—I noticed a criticism on Dr. Wilson's sermon in your paper of Wednesday, asserting that the Scriptures seem puzzling at times, and as I have given much thought to the doctrine of an intermediate state after death, not only for the religious but also for the wicked, I desire to speak of the perplexities under which the critic is labouring. He thinks that the passage from St. Paul concerning his desire to depart and be with Christ amply suffices to prove that Paradise is a false doctrine. Now the same St. Paul teaches us that the true believer is with Christ here on this earth, but at the same time he shows that while we are here in the flesh the carnal mind is continually at war with the mind of Christ, that is in the believer; therefore the desire of St. Paul to depart and be with Christ implies that he desired to be free from the opposition of the carnal mind. This is the sense in which we must interpret his words if we would be consistent with other assertions of the Word bearing on the point.

St. Paul never asserted that the Spirit of the believer passes into the glories of the New Jerusalem immediately after death, for he says in his epistle to Romans viii. chap., 23 verse, that those who have the first fruits of the Spirit are waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. It is evident, therefore, that Paul did not anticipate the glories of the first resurrection when he departed this life, but merely anticipated a state of justification or Paradise preceding that event. In the 1. Cor., 2nd chap., he says also "Eye hath not seen ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Now He knew perfectly well that many righteous men died before his time who did not receive these glories that the above passage implies. This passage also proves that neither Enoch or Elijah ascended to the glories of the highest heaven, which in this passage asserted to be hidden from all created eyes.

There are other passages which support this conclusion also, for we read in St. John, 3rd chapter, "And no man hath ascended up to Heaven but he that came down from Heaven." No man hath seen God at any time." St. John, 1st chapter. "That in all things He (Christ) might have the pre-eminence." Col. 1st chapter. In Rev. 6th chapter we read that the time will have come when God will give reward to his servants, the prophets, to the saints and to them that fear His name small and great. This establishes the fact that neither Enoch nor Elijah has received his full reward, as yet any more than the rest of mankind. I am sure that it must be clear to the meanest understanding that there is a middle state called Paradise. The Scriptures cannot be expounded properly without admitting it.

ANOTHER STRIKING PROOF OF THE MERIT OF PUTTNER'S EMULSION.

Office of J. F. T. Jenkins, M. D.
92 Richmond Square, Montreal.
April 25th, 1882.

Dear Sirs,—I prescribe your Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites largely in my practice with most gratifying results.

You may use my opinion in any way you desire. I cannot speak too highly of your preparation. Yours truly, J. F. T. Jenkins, M. D., C. M., etc.

Messrs. The Puttner Emulsion Co., Halifax, N. S.

Do Not be Deceived.

In these times of quack mediums advertisements everywhere it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Eclectric Bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and one that will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, diseases of the kidneys and urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by J. Geo. King.

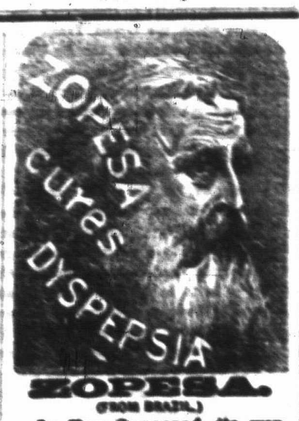
AT "CROSS OF LIFE," we observe constantly a failure of constitutional vigor, owing to the large demands made on the vital forces incident to rearing children. Prolonged nursing, constant watchfulness, brain worry and work exhaust the nervous system and arrest the work of repair. At this critical period a large number of cases have experienced the remarkable restorative power of Wheeler's Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya, which energizes the nervous system and promotes the functions of nutrition.

THE cause of death. It is known almost to a certainty that in fatal disease the individual dies either by the brain, heart or lungs. How wise then is the effort to maintain a perfect state of health? Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters are a veritable "Health Giver." They free the system from all impurities, cure Biliousness, Dyspepsia, and all diseases of the Stomach, Liver or Bowels. In large phials at 50 cents. Sold by all Druggists.

One of our best citizens would say to the public that he has tried Hall's Catarrh Cure, and it is all that is claimed for it. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by J. Geo. King.

The Celebrated Hair Renewer is applied with a sponge or a brush, and it never fails in its good effects on the hair. Sold at 50 cents per bottle by all druggists.

Paramount to mind and body, and all diseases due to incompetent or dissipated authority, are at once arrested and cured by the daily use of Puttner's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, etc.



KOPESA.

(NON BRAIN.)

A New Compound, its wonderful affinity to the Digestive Apparatus and the Liver, thereon, by the dissolving Juices, relieving almost instantly the dreadful results of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and the TORPID LIVER, makes Kopesa an every day necessity in every house.

It acts gently and speedily in Biliousness, Costiveness, Headache, Sick Headache, Distress after Eating, Wind on the Stomach, Heartburn, Pains in the Side and Back, Want of Appetite, Want of Energy, Low Spirits, Foul Stomach. It invigorates the Liver, carries off all surplus bile, regulates the Bowels, and gives tone to the whole system.

Cut this out and take it to your Druggist and get a 50 cent Sample, or a large bottle for 75 cents, and tell your neighbor about it.
