THE RAT PIT.

A Man Undertakes Too Large a Contract—Attacked by the Rodents and Badly Bitten.

An exhibition showing how low humanity can sink at times, and ending in what seemed like a meritorious sacrifice, came off in Philadelphia one morning recently. A worthless character named Denny Hosier made an agreement that he would put himself to kill 200 rats in a rat pit, without any other weapons than those provided by nature, and that in the space of forty minutes. The rats were kept from Wednesday without food or water until they were used, and when taken to the place of meeting an hour before the time set for the display they were ravenous with hunger. A ten-angular pit had been improvised in the north east and darkest corner of a warehouse over an old hatchway that had been taken up for the occasion. No time was lost in preliminaries. Hosier stripped himself, slipped on an ordinary pair of swimming tights, and climbed into the pit shortly before 2 o'clock and said that he proposed to kill the rats in the time specified, but that he would refuse to have the whole lot put down before him at once. This

WAS DONE FOR REASONS,

and it was finally agreed that 50 of the rodents should be killed first. The rats were contained in a strong, gunny bag, and in endeavoring to get the exact number out a dozen or more escaped. Hosier waited in the corner of the pit, and on his hands and knees until the rats were in and huddled up in a heap. Then, after asking the exact time, he thrust his naked arm into the heap and seized two rats at once. A squeeze, a squeak, and the animals ceased to breathe. Two more were deftly grabbed and treated in the same manner. This action, although very rapid, had the effect of starting the rats into activity. They separated and were scampering about the pit, vainly seeking to escape, and Hosier was obliged to begin himself. It was fully two minutes before he managed to seize the next rat, and one of the lookers-on yelled out, "Kill the beast with your teeth!" In an instant the man had the squirming

RODENT IN HIS MOUTH

and sunk his teeth through the back bone. Another and another met death in the same way. Then the sagacious little brutes appeared to realize by instinct that an universal enemy was among them. They squeaked shrilly, and instead of bunching together spread all over the pit. Half a dozen leaped on Denny's back. He tried to shake them off, and one big yellow fellow fastened his teeth on the fleshy part of the man's shoulder. This seemed to be the signal for a general combined attack. The rats swarmed over the man's naked back and crawled up his legs and arms. They ran over the back of his head and leaped down in front of his face. They fastened their sharp teeth in his body and thighs, and one of them even made fast to his left ear. Instead of attempting to kill any more of the desperate little creatures Hosier became frightened at the persistency of the attack, and did nothing but claw at the rats swarming all over his body.

HE SEEMED TO DANCE

about the pit, partly from fear and partly from pain. To add to his discomfiture a mischievous spectator suggested that the rest of the rats be put in the pit. This was acted upon at once, and the scene that ensued was a remarkable one. The almost naked man, bitten in a thousand places and the blood dripping from his neck and shoulders, leaped high into the air as he saw the last emptied of its amended contents. He came down with some force, and the old hatch door beneath him gave way. He fell to the cellar below, sustaining a fractured rib and a broken wrist. The rats, of course, all escaped. Frightened into comparative quiet by the unexpected termination of the sport, the spectators rushed below and conveyed their injured companion out of the building and to a drug store. His injuries were of such a nature, however, as to compel his removal to the Pennsylvania Hospital, where he still lies groaning with pain.

TORTURING A CHILD.

The Way a Canadian Mother Abused Her Offspring—Are There Any Others Like Her?

Under the heading of "Woman's Kingdom," the Mail has a department devoted to the discussion of questions affecting women and their work. Lately a discussion has been started over the use of corsets, and the propriety of tight lacing. If all that has been published were written by women there is a field for missionaries nearer home than China and the African wilds. Here is a specimen letter from "a mother": I have a good deal of trouble with my daughter, who is past fifteen. She had read some such silly nonsense as has been written by "J. K. T." and other anti-lacers against corsets, and refused to be laced. I have punished her severely several times, but she persists in coming down the laces at night. When I read the plan suggested by "A. B., Kingston," in Woman's Kingdom, I resolved to make one more effort at forcing my girl's waist. I provided myself with a leather strap, and before very long she was encased in a tight-fitting, heavily-boned pair of stays. "It's no use, mamma," she said "when they pull me to night I'll have to cut the laces." I smiled but said nothing. When undressed for bed I fastened her wrists together. My little girl was so surprised she did not say a word. In the morning I released her, but as soon as she was dressed I fastened her wrists together behind her back, and so kept them all day except during meal hours and while she was at the piano, and so for an entire week I kept her in bondage. She then promised me, if I let her hands free, she would not cut the laces. I accepted the bargain, and she kept her word. She has not removed her stays since, and already she tells me the pain is wearing off. I cannot tell "A. K." how thankful I am for her advice or for "Woman's Kingdom," through which I learned a plan which enables me to save my daughter from the greatest of all physical drawbacks—a bad figure. God pity the future generations of this country if the "mother who penned the above abominable sentiments represents many of her class. Judging from the Mail's column we are encouraged to believe that such "mothers" are few, and that the great majority of the women of Canada do not consider the natural development of a girl's body "the greatest of all physical drawbacks."

Bobsygeon Man's Gospel

The editor of the Bobsygeon Independent has his own views on most things, the times breaks out in a recent issue of his paper

"Loyalty means love of freedom, justice, truth and one's native country. A fig for any other loyalty. As to Kings, Queen's and Emperors, to Hong Kong with them. We want none of them. This journal is a Canadian journal, it appeals to Canadian readers, it represents Canadian thought of a particular by advanced character and its constituency its the Canadian people. We are loyal to Canada, and any other loyalty is a Canadian is a betrayal of Canadian interests.
