CITY AND VICINITY.

PRESS.—Gales from west and northwest, clearing cooler weather, preceded by few passing showers.

DOWN AGAIN.—The sink hole on the Ontario & Quebec RR., near Maberly, which the Company thought they had well fixed, went down yesterday and the trains have been stopped until the track is raised. Sink holes are always dangerous.

HUNTING HERE.—B. Tickner & Son, of St. Barrington, Mass., are at the British American Hotel. They spent over a week at Delta and Portland fishing, and came to Kingston yesterday. They go by the Kingston & Pembroke RR. tomorrow on a hunting expedition.

RETURNED HOME.—To-day Dean Lyster, accompanied by Dr. Dankers, of Watertown, reached the city. While in Watertown Dean Lyster preached twice in Grace Church to large congregations, and on Monday night was tendered a reception from 8 to 10 o'clock in the rectory.

POLICE COURT, TUESDAY.—Michael Ryan, a vagrant, could find no shelter, save in gaol to which he was sent for 6 months. The charges against John Card and William Carroll, for immoderate driving, were dismissed. They were driving to catch a train. The hearing was consequently compulsory. Richard Marchy was fined $5 and costs for assaulting a citizen. The assault was the result of a quarrel.

WHAT WAS THEIR MISSION?—People wondered what the President and General Manager of the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg RR. were doing in the city. A little bird whispers that they had in view the establishment of a steamboat line on the American Channel, connecting with the railway, and that the Folgers will be its proprietors and managers. They are desired because they have had such success in all their undertakings. A new steamer will be built.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Judge Proudfoot will open the Court of Chancery tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. The docket is small, consisting of three cases. Williamson v. McNeil has been referred to Napanee for trial. O'Donohue v. Montreal Transportation Company will be probably adjourned in consequence of the illness of plaintiff's counsel. The only case to be heard will be the Sweeny v. Buckley, a Prescott suit to set aside a conveyance.

WHERE WERE THE LIGHTS?—The city was as dark as Eurebus last night when lights was most required. The gas was unlit in many street lamps. The police reported that 15 lights were out on Princess street, 10 on Brock street, 7 on Queen street, 3 on Clarence street, and 32 in other parts of the city; total number of lamps from which no illumination was shed 67. People bumped against each other frequently, and a woman on Queen street fell into a hole and fainted. She was picked up and carried home.

A HIGH PAID MUSHROOM.—This morning a WHIG reporter called on Chief Horsey to secure the number of gas lights unlit last night. The Sergeant-Major had the list and was retiring from the Court at the time. The Chief said the Sergeant-Major had it downstairs. Down we went to secure it. His Majesty, however, taking it out of his cupboard started for the Chief's office. "Will you let me see the report?" asked the reporter. "It is addressed to the Chief of Police, I'll take it to him," snapped the officer and off he went. The reporter followed and in the longest and most roundabout way got his information. The city pays $600 for work which a boy at $1 a week could perform and with a great deal more civility to the public.

THE MUSIC OF THE BELLS.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Allegianian Bell Ringers perform in the Opera House. The Ottawa Free Press says their playing was witnessed by an audience whose appreciation, if measured by the applause which followed almost every number on the entire programme, must have been gratifying to their entertainers. The marvellous performance of the troupe upon their magnificent peal of one hundred and twenty Swiss bells, was, of course, a special feature of the entertainment. The vocal force of the company includes several voices of unusual excellence, and the duets, songs and ballads sung last evening were richly deserving of the frequent encores. The accomplishments, played with admirable correctness, and the perfect time and accord of the choruses, attained evidently by long years of continuous practice and concert, impart a swaying power to their music, which asserts itself in almost all the numbers. This is especially noticeable in their rendition of The Burning Ship.

A STRANGE STORY.

A respectable looking man, who had both eyes blacked, giving his name as Hans Olsen, a Norwegian, appeared at the Montreal water police station on Saturday and laid a charge against the second mate of the popular passenger propeller Celtic, plying between Montreal and Chicago. He said he shipped as fireman on the steamer at Kingston, and the same night he was dragged from his berth by the second mate and some of the crew with whom he had previously refused to drink and beaten until insensible. When he came to he found $60 and a watch and revolver had been stolen from his pockets and in fear of his life he jumped overboard and swam ashore in his drawers, coming on from Gananoque (which place he reached by swimming) on a tug which arrived on Saturday. A squad of police were told off to proceed to the propeller's berth and apprehend the mate and those of the crew who had assisted him, but on arrival at the vessel it was found that the officer in question had not been aboard after leaving the propeller on her arrival and Olsen refused to prosecute any of the hands. The propeller returned to the lakes without the second mate, and the water police are searching the city for him. The captain of the vessel, before her departure, informed the police that the second mate had told him that Olsen had been drinking and got off at one of the locks of the Cornwall Canal.

WIND IN THE SALVATION TENT.

There was a very severe gale last night and considerable damage was done. Several boat houses near the knitting mill were blown over and the skiffs inside greatly injured. Lumber on some of the wharves was carried away. The pier at "Redden's Resort" left its moorings and limbs were torn from many trees. The most serious damage was that done to the Salvation Army's tabernacle. The watchman had down the canvas as tightly as he could. Between 2 and 4 o'clock, however, it was ripped from top to bottom in the front with a report like the discharge of a cannon. The wind swept in and tore the back piece also from top to bottom. The caretaker then decided to let the canvas down. He had not sufficient help and the whole thing collapsed suddenly. The gas branches caught in the top and made long cuts. It is thought that the tent will now be put away for the year. The meetings will be held in Victoria Barracks and City Hall until the new barracks on Queen Street have been completed.

MAYOR'S EXCURSION.

A VERY FESTIVE EVENT—A GATHERING THAT THE DOWNPOUR OF RAIN COULD NOT SPOIL.

An Elegant Spread—Mr. Hiscock's Catering Appreciated—His Worship Glad to Meet His Friends—The Feasting and Speech-Making—Mayor Nominated For a Second Term.

Old Probs was not consulted about the Mayor's excursion, and when, at the hour of starting, dark clouds swept across the horizon and a pelting rain set in sighs issued from many hearts and regrets were expressed that weather and public feeling were not in better harmony. And yet when the Maud shoved out of the harbour, bedecked with bunting and affording a cheerful accommodation to the passengers, not a few mantled in water proofs and influenced by feelings which no ordinary atmosphere could affect, the occasion promised to be an exceedingly happy one. Between 2 and 3 o'clock the boat commenced her winding voyage among the islands, whose beauties have a hundred times during the past year set the poet's muse on fire and merited immortalizing in song and story. About the same time the misty rain gave place to a storm which cleared the deck and drove the civic guests into closer and more friendly relations. Though the view was limited, however, there were some who feasted their souls upon the passing scenery, and whose admiration reached a climax as the Maud glided swiftly through channels whose depth was doubtful and whose outlet they at first failed to see. The route is a new one, at least it is not generally travelled, and is not known to all navigators. "What do they call it?" asked an Alderman with dolish appearance of an old mariner as he critically squinted southward through a singular looking telescope. The old man lazily turned about, surveyed the coming candidate for the Mayoralty, and answered, "Damfino." The ward politican bowed profoundly and spread the news as industriously as his particular favourite, the dolino, can give currency to whatever has a tendency to scandalize her sex. The Masher took soundings frequently and decanted upon the history of certain points en route, especially upon what he knew about the island of "Won Such" where he once had a very interesting adventure. The company represented all classes in the community. It could not possibly be more representative. The following is a partial

LIST OF THOSE PRESENT.

The Mayor, still feeling ill as the result of an accidental injury; ex Mayors Britton, Robinson, McKelvey, McIntyre, Flanagan, A. Livingston, Pense, R. J. Carson and H. Cunningham; Alds. J. Wilson, Allen, Quigley, McIlmre, W. Wilson, Crothers, Smythe, Downing, J. Carson, Clements, Law, Shaw, Dunn, Creegan; ex-Alds. W. Power, H. Mooers, McRossie, Gibson, W. Harty, J. P. Gildersleeve, J. McKay, Gage and McCammon, Father Twohey, Rev. Mr. McCraig, Rev. Mr. Chambers and Rev. Mr. Bousfield; Messrs. M. Flanagan, F. C. Ireland, W. S. Gordon and Capt. Middleton, Capt. Edwin Horsey, Col. Duff, W. R. McRae, G. Thompson, E. Dodds, M. O'Brien, G. Carruthers, W. Cleverdale, Simmonds, C. H. Corbett, J. Agnew, W. Baillie, Z. Prevost, W. Gildden, J. Neil, R. Hewton, N. C. Folson, G. M. Wilkinson, Judge Price, S. Thornton, J. Smith, J. Fraser, M. Claxton, R. J. Elbeck, J. A. McMahon, M. H. Folger, J. White, et al. The afternoon was spent in various ways, in playing games, in puffing the smoke from a fragrant cigar, in discussing the coming elections and the schemes of different individuals in regard to public improvements. The company was too large to partake of dinner at one time, and so two tables were set, one at 4 p.m. and another about an hour later. The Mayor presided at both and saw that his friends had equal chances to enjoy the entertainment, properly prefaced by grace from one of the attendant clergymen. The dinner was the best yet served upon the Maud. Mr. J. Hiscock, the steward, has taste and experience, and the facilities for catering for large bodies in a most satisfactory way. The larder was full and the tables laid in a most tempting way, the senses of sight and smell being pleasantly affected by the floral display, from which there was an emission of delightful perfume. The bill of fare was all that the most fastidious leader in gastronomy could desire. The courses consisted of:

Oysters—Raw. Scalloped.
Fish—Boiled Trout, Oyster Sauce.
Boiled—Boned Turkey, Jellied à la Maud. Legs of Mutton, Caper Sauce. Cincinnati Hams. Beef Tongues.

FIRST BRIEF OF ORATORY.

The Mayor toasted "The Queen" and the "Governor-General and Princess Louise." The announcements were cordially received.

In drinking the health of the President of the United States the Mayor said he had forwarded a number of invitations to gentlemen at Sackett's Harbour and he was disappointed at not seeing them on board. Probably his "compliments" had not been received by those to whom they were directed. If so he regretted the fact as he desired to show his appreciation of the favours the corporation had received on its 4th July jaunt to the American side. At any rate he hoped the day was not far distant when the city would make a return of same sort for the manner in which its representatives had been received and treated at Sackett's Harbour. (Hear, hear and "We'll rally round the flag.")

United States Consul Twitchell briefly thanked the large company for the honour they had done the chief of the Government which he served in an official capacity.

Dr. McCammon toasted the Mayor, and he did not think any one had a better right to perform this service than himself. (Applause.) He had been Mr. Livingston's opponent in the last municipal election, but it was one of the characteristics of Kingston that when political and municipal contests were over there were no animosities to mar their relations as citizens. There was no one he more highly appreciated than the Mayor, and though they had been competitors for an office they were none the less friendly. As he spoke, with a merry twinkle in the eye, some one suggested that he was fairly bidding for support as a candidate in the new election. He twigged the situation, and took his seat amid applause. Chorus—"For he's a jolly good fellow."

The Mayor was glad to be surrounded by so many of his friends. Some one might say, "These are not all your friends!" If he did not think so they would not be his guests. (Hear, hear.) Because they did not vote for him did not make them his enemies, and moreover he did not think he had any enemies in the city. He was pleased to see the Council and medical and legal professions represented, to have present members of the press and mechanics, especially as he was a mechanic himself. Dr. McCammon's sentiments he appreciated. He and the Dr. had canvassed the city and they had said or done nothing to destroy the cordiality which had marked their dealings for many years.

A FORMAL VOTE OF THANKS.

Later in the evening Rev. Mr. Chambers moved the Mayor a formal vote of thanks, and Rev. Mr. Bousfield seconded it. The latter claimed that he was a master mechanic, that he had the care of the greatest of all works, of mankind himself, whose constitution displayed the most skillful mechanism, and much more than a machine—heart and soul and feeling.

The Mayor fittingly responded, and complimented the Folgers upon the comforts of the Maud, and "our own Joe" upon the excellence of his dinner. It could be said of the Maud that all who patronized her were satisfied with their treatment.

Mr. Hiscock said he had catered for the corporation for the first time, and he was exceedingly glad that his efforts had been so successful.

Commodore Folger said he appreciated the remarks of the Mayor, but he was willing that Mr. Hiscock and the other officers of the boat should have all the credit as it was their due.

A SECOND TERM SUGGESTED.

Ald. Allen (formerly called "Stonewall" by the boys) arose to speak in response to a unanimous call. He was the oldest Alderman in the city, and he could say, as the result of his experience, that members of the Council were abused more than thanked for anything they did. It was wonderful to note, however, how different was their language in the Council to that used by them at these little affairs. (Laughter.) At the entertainments all is praise, everything runs smooth, and it seemed to him that under the circumstances it would be better to have the dinners oftener. (Laughter.) He was not an admirer of one year terms in the Mayoralty. In a twelve-month a man could only get a fair idea of the duties of his office, and if he proved to be a good and worthy man he should have a second and even a third term. The present Mayor had got nicely into harness and he would advise the citizens to give him another trial. (Hear, hear and loud applause.) He did not approve of certain individuals meeting in caucus and nominating this and that one for public positions. The Mayors were the choice of individuals no longer but of the people, and hence the bargaining into which some entered was wholly unwarrantable. (Applause.) It was desirable, also, to have the support not only of the citizens but of the Council. He would not serve as Mayor if he was not so happily situated, for after all it is the Council, not the Mayor, that rules. The Mayor must see that the directions of the Council are carried out, and that the officials do their duty, but he cannot veto the action of the Council, and he can only suspend, not discharge, any officer of whose conduct he does not fully and personally approve. Entertaining as he did such views he hoped to see Mayor Livingston returned for another year. Other gentlemen present should be in a position to express their sentiments on the question. Ald. Allen's remarks were well received, and when he called for a demonstration from those who were of his opinion the majority in the cabin arose to their feet. The feeling of the assembly was decidedly favourable to the second term.

TOASTING THE EX-MAYORS.

Rev. Mr. Bousfield toasted the ex-Mayors.

Ald. Allen, looking at the table which had been cleared of all but the snowy white linen—Well, I've drunk nearly as many healths as I can in this shape. (Laughter.)

Commodore Folger—Suppose we have the champagne. Will you second that motion?

Ald. Allen (with a friendly glance around the room)—Certainly I will. (Renewed laughter.)

Ex-Mayor Creighton was called to his feet and endorsed the opinion of Ald. Allen that men should be kept in office for a longer period than one year. Of course he would not have remained in office for more than one term had he not been requested to do so by the Council. He never desired public life, and although in the Council for six years, three years as an Alderman and three years as Mayor, he had not solicited a vote, and if he had to live his past life over again he would not accept office of any kind from the Government or people. And yet few people around the board had more reason to be thankful for honors. Sixty years ago he was a poor small boy in the city. He had grown up here and had always enjoyed the good feeling of his fellow citizens. This stimulated him to perform the duties devolving upon him as efficiently as possible. Mayor Livingston had been in his Council, had never been actuated by selfish motives, was manly and independent at all times, and deserved much of the community. He was now receiving his reward, and it was to be hoped he would be long spared to engage in such festivities on his own and others' account. (Laughter.)

ALL EX-MAYORS HONEST MEN.

Ex-Mayor Robinson assured Mayor Livingston that his friends were as glad to be present as he was to see them. If he could enjoy himself they certainly did so. (Laughter.) He had been for many years connected with the Council, and he was proud to say that the ex-Mayors who had preceded him were personally pure and honest, and no one could point their finger to an improper act. (Hear, hear.) He was Mayor for two years, Mr. Creighton occupied the office for three years, others had it for double terms, and Mr. Livingston was deserving of the honor. He had done exceptionally well—for a tailor. (Laughter.) He knew of no jobbery in the Council, and there never would be any so long as there were men like Ald. Allen to look at what was going on. He eulogized Mr. Flanagan, spoke of his services, extending over half a century, service his merriting an increase rather than a decrease of salary. The picture gallery in the City Hall was something of which all should feel proud.

OTHER VETERANS HEARD FROM.

Ex-Mayor A. Livingston, who came from Belleville to do the Mayor honour, expressed his gratification with the entertainment and hoped the present occupant of the Chief Magistracy would be continued in office for another year. He, too, hailed Mr. Flanagan, who, he said, had been the right bower of the Mayors after Mayor for many years, and it was a dirty, mean thing to cut down his salary.

Ex-Mayor Flanagan thanked the assemblage for remembering his municipal experiences and associating him with the toast.

Mr. Cunningham said the ex-Mayors were a long lived race; he was high upon the hat. There were nine younger than himself. Ten years ago he had adopted Mr. Livingston's style of entertaining his friends—it seemed but as yesterday. Mr. Livingston during his term of office had been attentive to duty and careful in its performance, and when he would retire from office he would take with him the esteem of the whole community.

Ex-Mayor Britton had found a deal of cordiality among the Aldermen, the chair had always been respected and its rulings generally accepted. When he was Mayor he did not entertain his friends in this way, and this was one of the grievances promulgated against him in his second election. He had followed in the footsteps of an illustrious predecessor, however, and given the balance of his official salary, after the incidentals were paid, to the charitable institutions. The greatest jamboree upon the water occurred during the reign of a temperance Mayor. (Applause and laughter, and deep blushing on the part of Mr. Cunningham.) The Mayor and his friends started from Kingston to meet the Governor General, and the grand temperance affair was turned into the grandest champagne festival he had ever witnessed. (Loud laughter.) Since then the water affairs had been very pleasant, this one being no exception to the rule.

PRESENCE OF THE CLERGY.

Ex-Mayor McKelvey descanted upon the presence of the clergy—a new feature upon such occasions. He was glad to hear that the present Mayor was not likely to be an ex Mayor next year. When he had done so well and had the leisure to attend to the office his services should certainly be retained.

THAT CHALLENGE TO FIGHT.

Ex-Mayor McIntyre said those now toasted were forming an exceedingly formidable list, and one of their privileges was to get invitations to every little lunch and dinner under civic auspices. He was classed with some very venerable men. Mr. Flanagan ruled when he was a school boy, and the reputation to Mr. Creighton he had taken around when a student in the law office of Sir John Macdonald. He referred to the challenge to fight which he had received from Ald. Allen. It was not seriously regarded, as he and his friend had shaken hands over it. He believed Ald. Allen had asked him out, but when he went out Ald. Allen wasn't there. He tried to find his challenger and failed, probably because they could not see each other in the dark. Possibly they would terminate the present affair by taking off their coats and having a jamboree different from that spoken of by Mr. Britton. (Laughter.)

Ex-Mayor Pense remarked though a young man he had felt as if resurrected, that though he had only retired from office three or four years ago a great gap had occurred between him and the Council. Of one thing they could be certain—that a quorum of ex Mayors could always be depended upon on an occasion like this. When Mr. Livingston came to join the ex-Mayors he would be initiated with all the honor and dignity he deserved.

Ex Mayor Carson also spoke, assuring the company that if the city ever experienced a scarcity of new material for the Council it could fall back upon the ex Mayors.

TALKING ABOUT THE COUNCIL.

Mr. W. Robinson toasted the Council, whose exploits he was sorry to see in the papers. The Aldermen were honest, upright and straightforward, and deserved commendation.

Ald. Allen, for 33 years a member of the Council, was thankful for the compliments of the company, but said it would have been better for him and his business if he had never seen public life. He could have been Mayor several times, but did not think himself as capable for office as other candidates. He touched upon his challenge to Ald. McIntyre, and said he felt flattered that among the peace-makers were ministers of the gospel. He concluded by advocating longer terms for Aldermen as well as Mayors.

Ald. Smythe also made a good speech. He said the present Council was influenced by a desire to aid in the city's prosperity.

Ald. Dunn responded.

REMEMBERING THE CLERGYMEN.

Mr. Britton toasted the clergy.

Mr. McCraig said he was not in a position to make a suitable speech, not having a sermon with him. This he regretted, as it might have had an important bearing upon the relations between Alds. Allen and McIntyre. The trip had been one of the most delightful he ever had.

Mr. Chambers trusted that the Council in future in their references to ministers of the gospel, would be more deferential. (Hear, hear.) He was charged by one Alderman with cruelty to animals. He repudiated the charge and hoped it would not be repeated!

Father Twohey was glad to be a citizen of Kingston, where peace and harmony prevailed, where all enjoyed equal rights and privileges. He was pleased with the events of the day.

CITY OFFICIALS' COMPLIMENTS.

Judge Price toasted the city officials in a speech both witty and interesting. There were replies by Messrs. Flanagan and Agnew and Capt. Middleton.

Other toasts were about to be proposed, but the clock having been reached the assembly cheered the Mayor and departed.

There was a terrible down-pour of rain, and some of those who went through it must have suffered a severe ducking.

APOLOGY.

WE OWE THE PUBLIC an apology on account of the dirty, dusty and disarranged condition of our Store during the past few weeks, caused by plasterers, carpenters and and painters in the enlargement and improvement of our premises and also because our Stock has been run down and poorly assorted, as we did not deem it wise to receive new goods in the dusty condition of things.
