A Woman's Thought.

I am so weary of my home, she cried,
And of my endless tasks so mean and small,
I long to mingle with the world outside,
To think from hitherto and cry the troubled hair
From brooders colorless thing, through glittering crowd
Stains not my shine, my hands want hold the thought.

She looks a little tangled strip into her's,
And little frowns clouding to her grave,
Any, in her heart a tender memory stirs,
Of a child-face with fifth hair flowing down,
And as she kiss her little shadowed up,
I think, she cries, at least from love's hell out.

Forgive, dear Lord, forgive the foolish speech
For love is all: without it life is naught
Let me but have the blessings in my reach,
And I will never complain of aught.
Life's cup may hold for woman, what is will,
Without love's wine she will be thirsty still.

And knowing this, how have I dared to call
When love hath made the humblest hut divine
My lazy mind of duties mean and small?
Oh, darling, pour your warm, soft lips to mine
While I shall find I rule as home while,
Nor envy dwellers in the world outside.

A LAST CENTURY ROMANCE.

Adventures of a Woman During the Revolution—Brave Wife of a U.E. Loyalist.

A few days ago Miss Jennie Hazen, of Angola township, was passing a second-hand picture dealer's store in Buffalo when she noticed among some old paintings a picture that was a striking likeness of herself. Looking at the reflection of herself in the window and then upon the old painting, the resemblance was wonderful. The young lady, who is only 16 years old, returned home to Angola full of her discovery, insisting that some one had been painting her picture and arranging her as a fright (the girl of the painting was dressed in the style of the last century). Incited by curiosity some of the family went to Buffalo, and upon seeing the picture were as amazed as Miss Jennie. Their bewilderment was increased by deciphering the name of Jennie on the back of the painting. It also bore the name of the artist, "Richardson, Philadelphia."

THE PAINTING SOUGHT

The painting was bought for $3.50, and was sent to the young lady's grandmother in Erie, Mrs. Dr. K. J. Clark, who recognized it as the portrait of her grandmother, Jennie Elizabeth McMichael, an intrepid Philadelphia girl, whose adventures during the revolutionary period were told at hundreds of firesides by the grandfathers and grandmothers of the present generation. The Courier correspondent called upon Mrs. Dr. Clark and obtained from her the interesting history of the beautiful original of the old portrait. Jennie Elizabeth McMichael was born in Philadelphia, and was the daughter of Dr. McAllister, a surgeon in the Continental Army. When about seventeen years of age she met Edward McMichael, a young British officer of a Scotch regiment, who had taken station from a storm at the seminary where she was being educated. It was a case of love at first sight, and although her father was an uncompromising foe of British rule and British arms she decided to give up all and follow him. They eloped, and were married on the same night of their flight. Her husband's regiment was sent to Canada, and thither she went. During the war Captain McMichael undertook a mission very similar to that of Major Andre, and being captured he was sentenced to death, shooting being permitted instead of hanging. He was treated with the greatest courtesy, and his wife, the original of the picture, was permitted to visit him as often as she pleased. She resolved to

EFFECT HIS DELIVERANCE.

The day before the execution was to take place she concealed files about her person, and while apparently fainting over the prisoner's prostrate form in great grief she was filing away at the iron shackles that held his wrists and ankles. Her piteous cries drowned the noise of the file, and in a few hours she succeeded in freeing him of his chains. At midnight the provost marshal entered and informed Captain McMichael that the efforts made to save him had failed, and that orders had been received to execute the sentence of death at daybreak. The young wife's shrieks deeply affected the official, and he suggested an early farewell of the prisoner. Captain McMichael nobled approvingly, and advised his wife to bid him good-bye then and there, and leave the prison under the provost's escort. She finally consented, and requested the officer to call for her in five minutes, the last five that she was to spend alone with her young husband. The provost withdrew, and in ten minutes he returned. He found a woman convulsed with grief powerless to speak. With the tenderness of a humane man he gently took her arm and led her weeping from the room. He escorted her to the dwelling she had occupied during her husband's incarceration, and returned to his quarters to prepare for

THE WORK OF DEATH.

Ten minutes later a sentry came in and said that the woman just led from the building in an apparently fainting condition had taken to her heels as fast as she could after the provost had left her. In hope a visit to the prisoner's room was made, and the officer was considerably relieved to find the prisoner all safe. He was lying on the bed in his uniform, the red sleeves of which could be distinctly seen upon the arms thrown over his head. He had fallen into a doze, the last sleep on earth, they thought, and so they would not arouse him, but they kept a sharp eye on him. Just before daybreak the clanking of arms was heard outside, and the prisoner was seen to shiver as he lay. It was the firing party. "Captain McMichael," said the provost marshall, "it is time." There was no answer. "Come, McMichael, meet this like a brave soldier." Then the form arose, and to the astonishment of the party they behold Jennie McMichael in her husband's uniform. She had changed clothes with him in that ten minutes and he had escaped. A hot pursuit was made, but McMichael was far away and within the British lines. Her father would not intercede to save her from punishment, but consented at take and rear her infant son, John, who grew up to be a loyal American and the founder of a large and esteemed family of McMichaels, which exists to-day in Philadelphia.

MRS. M'MICHAEL SEARCHED.

"The authorities decided to release Mrs. McMichael upon her promise to return from the continental lines and never return. A second time her husband was captured, but his identity was skillfully concealed by her, thus preventing the certain death that awaited him in Philadelphia, where he would be recognized immediately. By a clever manoeuvre she got him exchanged for four private soldiers who were captured by the British. After the war they lived at Buffalo, where McMichael died. The widow went to live near Hamilton, Ont., and was presented with considerable land. Later a miserly Canadian sought to wrest it from her and set out for Toronto to obtain a deed from Governor Simcoe. Hearing of this the brave woman mounted her swiftest horse, and overtaking the plotter made him dismount and give up his horse. She then spoke on before him, fording and swimming rivers in the dead of night, and not drawing rein until she reached the Governor's house. All water-soaked and frozen as she was she presented herself before the Governor and told her story. When the coveter of her possessions arrived he found he had been frustrated and that Mrs. McMichael's deeds had been confirmed. The man became a magistrate afterwards, and revenged himself by drafting her sons for the war of 1812. He took them one by one as they were slain in battle. She lived to a great age, and upon a tombstone in a little lot on the farm she owned is the following inscription: "Sacred to the memory of Jennie E. McMichael, daughter of Dr. A. McAllister, of Philadelphia, a noble girl, a brave wife and unhappy mother." Such was the original of the old picture of the one time belle of Philadelphia, and the great-great grandmother of the young girl who thought some modern artist had been painting her picture and arraying her as a fright."

MARIA M'CABE'S STORY.

How She Feels About Her Reprieve—Her Thankfulness to Her Many Friends.

Sheriff McKellar went down to the Hamilton gaol on Wednesday night to inform Maria McCabe that the death sentence passed on her was commuted to fourteen years' imprisonment in the Kingston Penitentiary. The meeting took place in the Governor's apartments. When Maria entered the room the Sheriff greeted her with the words: "I have brought good news to you tonight." While the reprieve was being read she listened quietly, and did not appear to be affected either way. To say that she did not feel pleased would be to err, but she was undemonstrative.

CHAT WITH A JOURNALIST.

Next morning a representative of the Spectator called at the gaol and requested an interview with Maria McCabe. The interview took place in one of the sitting rooms, off which is Maria's cell. When the young woman entered the room she was abashed to find a reporter instead of a charitable lady to see her, but a few kind words from Mrs. Hill placed her at her ease, and as the conversation progressed she spoke freely.

"I suppose you are well pleased at the commutation of your sentence," said the reporter, by way of an opening remark.

"Yes, I am very thankful," was the reply; "everyone has been very good to me, although I thought I was friendless. Mrs. Hill has acted as a mother would towards me since I came here."

Reporter—Do you think the sentence is too long?

Ans.—No, I do not. I know I did a bad deed, and I deserve punishment for it."

SPEAKING OF HER RELATIONS.

Reporter—Have you any relatives?

Ans.—I have a father and sister, the youngest living in the old country. My mother died when I was six years old. My young life was spent in a convent. I little thought at that time that I would ever be sentenced to be hung, or be sent to the penitentiary for 14 years.

Maria was then taken into her cell. She does not appear to be of such a character which her crime would lead one to expect. She is below the medium height, her face is long and thin, and by no means unprepossessing. Two long curls hang from her forehead to her cheeks, and altogether Maria looks like a respectable young girl of mild disposition. Mrs. Hill, the matron of the gaol, stated that Maria was one of the best prisoners ever placed under her charge, and that she behaves herself remarkably well. She is very fond of reading, and passes the greater portion of her time at that occupation. She has never uttered a complaint against her sentence or confinement in the gaol.

Maria will be taken to Kingston before the 15th of next month, and Mrs. Hill will probably accompany her.

Testing the Merits.

So much has been said regarding the wonderful cures made through the aid of the spirometer, the invention of Dr. M. Souvielle of Paris, ex-aide-surgeon of the French army, that many eminent physicians have been induced to investigate the instrument, and also the scientific standing of the International Throat and Lung Institute. All who have so investigated express themselves satisfied that the physicians composing the staff of the institute are thoroughly qualified medical men, that patients receive the latest and most scientific treatment, and that the spirometer is really a valuable addition to medical science.

One very prominent physician said: "If there is anything in inhalation it can be got out of the Spirometer. I am surprised at the powerful effects produced." Any one suffering from Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Consumption in its first stages or Laryngitis should consult the physicians of the Institute personally, and be examined, if not write for list of questions and copy of International News published monthly. Physicians and sufferers can try the Spirometer free. Consultations free. Address International Throat and Lung Institute, 173 Church st., Toronto, or 19 Philip square, Montreal, P.Q.

"I had been for eight months unable to work, and felt as though I would as soon die as live, through Dyspepsia and Indigestion. I weighed at the time of getting a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure 136 lbs.; used 3 bottles, and now weigh 163 lbs., and never was better in my life. It was McGregor's Speedy Cure that brought me around." So says Wm. Doll, Hamilton. Go to Chown's Drug Store and get a free trial bottle or the regular size for 50 cents and $1.

The Faith Cure

One who tried the faith cure declares she was cured—"cured of her faith"—But Burdock Blood Bitters cures by works, not by faith alone. It is the grand specific for all diseases of Liver, Kidneys and Blood, purifying, regulating and strengthening the vital fluids.

Now that there is a reliable remedy for kidney troubles half the terrors attached to these complaints have been removed. For this let all be thankful, and to Dr. Van Buren's Kidney Cure award all praise for having thus removed a historic misdeemed fatal disease from our path. It was never known to fail. Sold by all druggists.

☞ For 10 cents sufficient dye is given in the Triangle Dye Package to color from 2 to 4 pounds of any kind of goods. For carpet rags, yarns and shawls, fast, any other dye stuff. Ask for sample card of 30 colors at your druggist's.

FARM AND HOUSE NOTES.

What is Brief is Going on in a Circle that Interests the Farmer—Selections.

Where sawdust is used for bedding the manure is very good for celery.

Water as hot as can be taken, is a cordial in case of nausea and vomiting.

A light sprinkling of lime upon potatoes when stored is an excellent preventative of rot.

After cleaning and oiling harness apply gum tragacanth and it will be as bright as new.

Keep hens quiet and well fed if you wish to fatten them, but make them scratch for their living if you desire eggs.

When grooming a horse give as much care to the feet and legs as to the rest of the body. Horses should not be allowed to stand in filth and dampness.

It is even more necessary to keep sheep dry under foot by a sufficiency of litter than to protect them by roofing. They should never stand or lie in mud or water.

So poisonous to vegetable life is the acid of apples that even a few lying under a tree will kill the grass where they lay so that it will not start in the Spring.

A cup of hot water is a good tonic and stomach cleanser, and a sure cure for constipation. It should be taken in the morning and evening; just after rising and before retiring.

Kerosene oil will soften leather hardened by water, and make it as pliable as new. A few drops of the oil on the hands, after being in the water, will prevent them from chapping.

To heal cut fingers with rapidity saturate the part with alum water; it will sting sharply for a little bit, but will soon stop for good and heal quickly. I have tried it several times.

When pigs are fed plentifully with soft corn, as is common at this season, it sours on their stomachs, and charcoal should be given as a corrective. It will be greedily eaten, and will enable the pigs to dispose of more corn and with better prospects of gain.

A week or ten days is sufficiently long time in which to fatten turkeys if they are put in a dark place, kept quiet and given all that they eat at regular intervals. With a longer period of stuffing some will lose rather than gain flesh.

Partially rotten potatoes are not good cod for milch cows. They are unwholesome; they impart a disagreeable flavour to the milk and injure its keeping qualities, and also that of the butter made from it. Even cooking will not make them proper food. Better throw them away.

Farmers should seek more variety in the direction of more vegetables and less pork. They above all men should have varied, wholesome food, and were it not for the free air and exercise they pass through they would suffer. For should grain answer for strength, vegetables for health and fruits for pleasure.

All kinds of roots keep better in cellars if slightly covered with dry earth. This is especially true of turnips which, unless so covered, soon become stringy and nearly worthless. Most cellars are too warm and dry for any kind of roots or fruit, and only sufficient should be so stored for use when pits out of doors cannot be reached.

With the beginning of cold weather fattening stock need warmer quarters or they will gain slowly. Hogs, if fattened sufficiently, may now be more profitably killed than kept to a later period. The increased weight will be less in proportion to the food consumed, and it is never certain that the price of pork will advance proportionally.

The tallest, straightest trees in the nursery row do not generally make the best in the orchard. Their unchecked growth is an intimation that they have never been root pruned. In transplanting their long slim roots are cut off and they suffer. The stocky looking—not stunted—trees have these roots in more compact shape and most of them can be saved by carefulness in digging.

There is a prejudice in favor of red as the color of Shorthorn cattle. For sale purposes it may be well to humor this fancy, as it pays; but farmers who grow stock for beef or milk can often get animals of unfashionable color at prices so reasonable as to make it an object. For milk especially some of the white or roan strains of Shorthorns are preferable to those of the more fashionable color.

Hoes, shovels, plows and other implements this Winter should be cleaned by scouring, or, if rusty, by vigorous rubbing with kerosene oil. Then oil both wood and iron. The oil toughens the wood and keeps the iron from rusting. Even better would it be to paint the wood on machines that have been once painted and from which the paint was worn off, but the oil will answer good purpose without the paint.

The pasture is the most neglected part of the farm. However much is done to it, the best will still not be so productive as in some other crop. If manure is applied it makes weeds grow, with little chance for getting them out. If there is increased growth of grass one-half the grain is wasted by the trampling of cattle and horses. Still, it will often pay to top-dress a pasture, especially a year or more before it is to be plowed, so that the manure can be well worked through the soil.

The feeder can not err in giving too great a variety in the food of sheep. The best ration known for fattening sheep was of equal of oats, corn, peas, and millet, by weight, and to 15 bushels of the mixture was added 1 bushel of flaxseed, all ground fine together. Each sheep fed 2 pounds of this mixture with hay, made a regular gain of 3 pounds each per week, besides growing an unusually fine staple of wool. The flaxseed is peculiarly soothing to the digestive organs. It is a perfect preventive of all diseases caused by dry fodder.

Eden's Cocoa.—Gratefully and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of indigestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets and tins (½lb. and 1lb.) by Grocers, labelled—James Epps & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London, Eng.

Samson lost his strength with his hair. Thousands of men and women have their beauty with theirs and care being somewhat resume the manner of time by using the famous Cimiline Hair Restorer. Sold at 50 cents per bottle by all druggists.

SETH GREEN.

WHAT THE GREAT FISH CULTURIST SAYS:

Last winter I went to Florida and while there contracted Malaria in a very severe form. When I returned home I went to bed and remained here until spring. My symptoms were very bad. I had dull aching pains in my head, limbs and around my back. My appetite was wholly gone, and I felt a lack of energy such as I have often heard described but had never experienced. Any one who has ever had a severe attack of Malaria can appreciate my condition. As I failed to get any better I determined to try a remedy made by a gentleman in whom I had the greatest confidence. I am happy to say it effected permanent relief and that I am well to-day through the influence of Warner's SAFE Cure. After such an experience I can most heartily recommend it to all sufferers.

GALLOWAY

Old Mistress Theodore
Went to Galloway's store
To get for her daughter some furs!
And when she got there
I declare!! I declare!
She didn't have that skin from Cuba.

She got in a stew
To know what to do,
But Galloway came to her aid!
He sold her his goods,
Muffs, Boas and Hoods,
Good value for all that she paid!

She went away pleased
And vowed on her knees
She'd come and buy more of his stock,
For the goods that he sold
Were equal to gold,
To a woman who had a large flock.

The moral is plain
To his store again,
The people go back who now buy
His goods are marked low
And all sure to go
Before the December snow flies.

IMPORTANT TO STEAM USERS
AND ENGINEERS
How to Keep Boilers Clean.
FISHER'S PATENT AUTOMATIC BOILER CLEANER, when properly applied to a steam boiler, never fails to remove all
Muddy Deposits and Sediments
from water before they become baked into scale. The Cleaner is automatic and certain in its action, and will outwear a new boiler. A boiler kept clean burns a saving in fuel and repairs, as well as a reduced liability to explosion.
Having the agency for this section of the country, we are prepared to fit them up and guarantee them to be all the patentee claims for them.
For further information apply to
McKelvey & Birch,
Plumbers and Steamfitters,
Agents, Kingston, Ontario.
