Oppidet per Orbem Decor.

The Girouard Bill, which, after a lively discussion passed the House of Commons yesterday, contains the following enactments:

1. All laws prohibiting marriage between a man and the sister of his deceased wife are hereby repealed, both as to past and future marriages, and as regards past marriages as if such laws had never existed.

2. This Act shall not affect in any manner any case decided by or pending before any court of justice, nor shall it affect any rights actually acquired by the issue of the first marriage previous to the passing of this Act, nor shall this Act affect any such marriage when either of the parties has afterwards, during the life of the other, lawfully intermarried with any other person.

It is, of course, a matter for regret if the Sunday afternoon services in Queen's University injuriously affect the churches in any way. Such was not anticipated by the Principal and Faculty. What was their object in instituting public worship? To provide (1) a service, which, connected with the college and held within its walls, should specially interest and attract the students and ultimately benefit them; (2) to comply with the college by-laws and charter, and gratify a wish which Dr Grant entertained when he resigned his pastoral charge at Halifax to accept his present position, namely, that he might carry on the work to which he plied with his energy and spirit when ordained a minister, and, when he could, preach the Gospel; (3) to give the students, as especially whose purpose it is to become clergymen, an opportunity to hear men of varied talents and attainments study the different [illegible] and presenting them [illegible] There may be objections [illegible] services, but they must [illegible] indeed before the College [illegible] Faculty deem it advisable [illegible] them, particularly as no [illegible] they were designed [illegible] satisfactorily reached.

FAVOURING THE THIEF.

We are indebted to the [illegible] for calling our attention to the following remarkable statement [illegible] that it was found in the editorial columns of the News, which has [illegible] outdo the Mail in its advocacy of high protective tariff.

"Patriotism almost invariably yields to the almighty dollar when the two come in contact in trade. People buy what they want without reference to the nationality of the producer, and if the foreigner can beat the native in quality or cheapness he secures the patronage. Had it been otherwise of course, the commerce of England would never have attained its present proportions."

Our Toronto contemporary speaks truthfully and at the same time [illegible] tically when it observes that it will take a good deal of protectionist [illegible] the part of the News to counteract this one common-sense remark. We have been somewhat puzzled to know how to consider the bearing of this conversion in favor of Free Trade. It is not such as any instructions to the Tory press can justify, it is in direct and alarming contradiction to the doctrine which the News has preached in a learned and exhausted way for the benefit of a stupid public, and it is so radical in its tendencies as to warrant the inference that the editor has, in a lucid moment, forgotten his former professions and undertaken to ventilate a little honest sentiment. We congratulate him upon his desire to do justice to a much abused and greatly misunderstood theory, and trust that henceforth we shall have the gratification, with him, of viewing trade questions eye to eye. The sudden conversion of a journal whose political course has been so carefully supervised and regarded as so complete, is, of course, very notable to say the least of it, but it is another illustration of the old remark, "that truth is mighty and will prevail."

GENERAL ELECTION.

We learn from Ottawa that at the Ministerial caucus, held yesterday morning, Sir John Macdonald announced a fact that has long been known to most people—that it "may be advisable," at an early date, to dissolve the House and appeal to the country. We are not told how this intimation was received by the followers of the Ocean King, but the news must have been unpleasant to some whose blind devotion led them to sacrifice personal prospects for their party's benefit. Many of the Tory representatives in the present House know full well that they will not be re-elected and must object to being deprived of a year's parliamentary honors. Sir John advises preparation for battle. He has counselled the same thing before, and his reiteration of the warning indicates the anxiety with which he regards the outlook. He secretly purposed a surprise, but his tactics were anticipated. There never was so much activity among the Liberals. Already the candidates have been selected in most of the constituencies, and when the House prorogues, about the beginning of May, the electoral forces will be well marshalled for the campaign, which is expected to occur not later than June.

A great deal of sport has been made of the Globe, which some time since stated, on the best of authority, that an early dissolution of Parliament was premeditated. Some of the Tory papers became quite sarcastic, some denied that there was any ground for the proclamation, and the journals which affect to give Government information in advance of its publication in an official way scorned the idea of important news being first given in the Opposition press. Now, however, the Globe and its Liberal contemporaries have their triumph, they have been operating on an accurate basis, and the contradictions of their statements appear to have been so much buncomb, written in blissful ignorance of the facts or for the purpose of misleading and deceiving the general public.

Sir John's assurances will inspire other than those who specially owe him allegiance. The Liberals will see how necessary it is to go to work, to unite and prepare for a campaign, which, properly conducted, should result in the defeat of the present Administration, and the transference of the government of the country to Mr. Blake and those of a liberal and patriotic order who may be associated with him.

THE NELSON MURDER.

The Prisoner Convicted and Sentenced to be Hanged—Addresses of Counsel and Judge.

At the trial of O'Rourke in Milton for the murder of the Mahers, the evidence was concluded and Mr. Murphy addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner. He urged on the jury their grave responsibility as the judges of the life and death of the prisoner, to whom should be given every reasonable doubt. Going into the difference between murder and manslaughter he said murder was the killing of a person with malice aforethought; in manslaughter the deed is done in hot blood and without any premeditation. There was no possible motive why O'Rourke should have a premeditated intention of killing an old man 85 years of age. He had no money to tempt the commission of such a crime, and no one knew it better than O'Rourke, who had eaten and slept in the house for seven weeks. Even the Crown counsel would not claim that the daughter had been outraged, nor could revenge have been the motive. Mr. Murphy examined very minutely the testimony, pointing out everything that was favorable for the prisoner. He regarded the confession of O'Rourke as something of very little value, as they had been obtained in an unscrupulous way, and by questions which should never have been put to the prisoner, and by inducements that should never have been held out to him; but, even if the jury were determined as true then that part which goes to show that the blow that killed the old man was on sudden impulse, should receive consideration and the verdict should be manslaughter. Everything was advanced that could in any way sustain the theory that the old man and O'Rourke had quarreled, and that then the blows had been struck. In conclusion he appealed to them to err on the side of mercy, if errors crept in at all. Mr. Murphy's address lasted an hour and five minutes. It was an able and eloquent plea for a merciful consideration of the prisoner's case. During the delivery O'Rourke watched intently the faces of the jury, turning occasionally to look at Mr. Murphy. The jury seemed much interested, but it was vain to look in their faces for any expression of their opinion of the case so far as it had gone.

TO RECEIVE THE CONFESSIONS

Mr. Osler replied, contending that the evidence given was sufficient presumption that the prisoner had returned to Maher's house and was at least preparing to outrage the daughter when Pat Maher arrived. Going over the particulars of the evidence he held that even without the confessions a case of murder had been made out against O'Rourke.

JUDGE SUMMING UP.

Mr. Justice Cameron, in his charge to the jury, made a clear and exhaustive review of all the evidence. He placed before the jury all the circumstance of the case, and explained the difference between manslaughter and murder. If O'Rourke had gone to Maher's for any improper purpose, and had killed the old man even in a quarrel, the crime would still be murder. Nothing had been shown to prove that the prisoner was in any way weak-minded. If he was the man who had killed Edward Mahar there was nothing shown in evidence to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter.

SENTENCED TO BE HANGED.

The jury went out at 1 o'clock, one of them taking with him the overcoat and hat worn by Patrick Mahar on the night of the murder. O'Rourke saw them leave the court room with unchanged face. After an hour's absence the jury returned. The foreman, John Peacock, handed in a written verdict, but was told that the verdict must be announced. The verdict was spoken by the foreman, and was "Guilty." The prisoner heard the verdict with stolid indifference, and was unmoved when Mr. Justice Cameron, in feeling tones, sentenced him to be hanged at Milton on [illegible] June next. The court was crowded, and all present seemed to think the verdict a just one. There is no probability of the sentence being commuted. O'Rourke's countenance never changed as he was taken back to his cell.

COOLNESS OF O'ROURKE.

The coolness and self-possession of O'Rourke during the nine weary hours of Tuesday's sitting of the court were remarkable. He seemed the most unconcerned man in the court room. Not even when Pat Maher put on the overcoat and hat he wore on the night of January 20th, showing the cuts made by the axe and telling the story of the murders in terrible and painful detail, did he show any sign of feeling. The keen edged axes with the bloody stains still remaining on them were handed up to the witness stand close by O'Rourke's seat, for identification, but he sat there with so unmoved a countenance that if the evidence had been less clear against him few of the spectators would have considered him guilty, as every one did before a word of evidence was taken. He did not seem even to appreciate the strenuous efforts his counsel were making for his life. His attention, when not fixed on any one, was devoted to the reporters who sat a few feet in front of him.

ANOTHER CONFESSION.

After the trial O'Rourke was visited by Chief Stewart, of the Hamilton police force, to whom he said: "It's all right, old man, I expected this, and I'm only sorry the thing don't take place to-morrow. I am guilty of the murders and I suppose I ought to swing for them. You see it was this way: I made arrangements to go back to Maher's if I could not strike a job. I did so, and met Bridget coming in. I said, 'Well, Bridget, I'm back again,' and she called me a lousy brute, and told me to go off. The old man then came to the door and threatened me with a club if I did not go away at once. I got mad at him, and, picking up an old axe, I belted him on the head. Bridget by this time had got a sharp axe and was making for me, when I closed with her, took it away from her, and knocked her in the head too. But, so help me God, I never intended nor attempted to do anything dirty to her."

The date of execution was fixed far ahead in order to allow of a technical point of law, raised by the prisoner's counsel, impeaching the regularity of the proceedings, being argued. The condemned man received his sentence unmoved. Mr. Justice Cameron pronounced the crime as one of the most heinous in criminal annals.

Answer This.

Did you ever know any person to be without inaction of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, or did you ever know one who was well when either was obstructed or inactive; and did you ever know or hear of any case of the kind that Hop Bitters would not cure? Ask your neighbor the same question.—Times.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Marriage Bill Passed—Temporalities Bill also Passed—Objection to Kirk Bill.

Ottawa, March 23.—In the House of Commons yesterday the principal topic of discussion was Mr. Girouard's Bill concerning marriage with a deceased wife's sister as amended in Committee. The Bill was attacked by amendments in a number of forms, and all of them were rejected.

In Committee, Mr. Mills' amendment to alter the Bill so to make the law in this respect uniform throughout the Dominion, was lost by two to one.

An amendment moved by Mr. Amyot, legalizing all marriages celebrated by competent clergymen, was negatived without recourse to a vote.

Sir Albert Smith then moved a six months' hoist, and a vote being called the motion was lost by a large majority, as was also a subsequent amendment by Dr. Strange, legalizing marriage with a deceased brother's wife.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

The only other discussion of importance took place on a motion introduced by Mr. Blake respecting the granting of mining leases, and certain amendments to a Bill incorporating the Electric Light Company. The House adjourned at 10:20 o'clock.

In the Private Bills Committee this morning the bill incorporating the Temporalities' Fund of the Presbyterian Church was taken up, clause by clause, and passed with some amendment.

The Kirk Bill, asking for incorporation under the name of the "Presbyterian Church of Canada in connection with the Church of Scotland," was then taken up. On the preamble of the Bill being put objection was raised to the use of this name, it being identical with that under which the Union Church is known. After some discussion and cross firing it was decided to postpone further consideration of the Bill until the next meeting of the Committee in order that a new name might be chosen. The Committee then adjourned at 1:40 o'clock.

In Committee on Banking and Commerce the Bill to reduce the capital stock stock of the Ontario Bank one half was passed. The statutes giving the directors power to increase the stock and issue new shares was struck out.

The Dominion Fire & Marine Insurance Bill, and the Mutual Life Insurance Bill, were sent to a Committee.

A Belleville Merchant's Crime.

Belleville, March 22.—R. Jacobs was tried at the police court this morning for committing an indecent assault on a young girl named Annie Mills, who had been employed as a salewoman in his shop. The girl herself was placed in the witnessbox and testified that Jacobs had on the occasion specified, as well as on other occasions previously, accomplished his purpose, partly by force and partly by means of threats of exposure. The prisoner was remanded until Friday. The girl is 16 years of age, but is apparently weak, both physically and mentally.

American Politics.

New York, March 23.—The Sun's Washington says the impression seems to be that Shepherd has told about all he knows in the way of implicating high officers of the Government in his speculation.

The Tribune's Washington says Senator Jones states that from his knowledge of the President's opinions concerning the exercise of the veto power he does not apprehend that the President will veto the Chinese bill if it is passed.

The Mason Case.

Washington, March 23.—It is understood that the Judge Advocate General's view of the Mason case shows that the use of the military to guard Guiteau was not, in a legal sense, in charge of the company to which Mason belonged, and under all rulings of the Bureau of Military Justice the assault on Mason charged with is not a violation of the articles of war under which the Court tried him.

Recommendations Rejected.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—It is stated that the Czar has refused to confirm the recommendation of the commission on the Jewish question in favour of compelling Jews to quit rural districts, on the ground that such action would almost ruin agriculture, and the recommendations are generally conceived to be vindictive.

Boat Misfortunes.

Philadelphia, March 23.—The Steward of the ship Screamer recently lost at sea attributes the loss of life and property to the Captain's drunkenness and mismanagement. Though the ship was fast sinking, he refused to allow the sailors to hoist the signal of distress.

Crossing the Channel.

London, March 23.—Col. Burnaby, author of "My Ride to Khiva," left Dover alone in a balloon at 10 o'clock this morning in his endeavour to reach France. If he passes over Bologne, as he hopes to do, he will continue in the air until near Paris.

The "Post" Libel Case.

The preliminary examination in the case of the alleged libel by the Post upon Mr. F. B. McNamee was held this afternoon in the Queen's Bench Court room, before the Police Magistrate, Mr. M. C. Desnoyers, at 2 o'clock. Messrs. D. Macmaster, Q.C., D. Barry and T. W. Ritchie, Q.C., appeared for the prosecutor, and Mr. C. J. Doherty represented Mr. Whelan. The deposition of Mr. McNamee was produced in Court, charging Mr. Whelan with having maliciously and wiltully caused to be printed and published and circulated in the Post newspaper certain injurious, defamatory, false, malicious, scandalous, statements calculated to injure the character and standing of the deponent and to bring him unto contempt in the estimation of the public. And it further alleged that the said libellous, scandalous, and defamatory article had been published and circulated by the said John P. Whelan, the defendant, well knowing them to be utterly false and without foundation.

The defence declined to cross-examine, and Mr. Whelan was at once fully committed to stand his trial for criminal libel at the approaching June term of the Court of Queen's Bench.

The same securities will probably be accepted for the defendant.—Witness.

A Reasonble Question.

SIR,—Seeing the following in last night's News it struck me rather forcibly that Mr. Roen's horse was not a teetotaller:

"NOT THE PLACE.—An old subscriber writes us from Inverary, that the man Roen who had his horse killed in this city, while under the influence of liquor, does not hail from that temperate village, but lives away back of Inverary."

The question is, "Where did that horse obtain the whiskey?"

Two other men are reported to be missing.

When all with one accord give spontaneous testimony in favor of St. Jacobs Oil, we know that its virtues are such as to merit it, and we are heartily glad of the generosity which does not hesitate to give a good article its due merit of praise. Mr. William Haleler, at the Marathon Hotel, Wausau, Wisk relates the following experience: Some time since, said Mr. H, I took a severe cold, which settled in my limbs, and gradually developed into a bad case of rheumatism. After suffering for some time, and using many different preparations (among which was a remedy prescribed by a physician)—all without receiving any benefit whatever, a friend advised me to try St. Jacobs Oil. I did so expecting to receive but little benefit, and was considerably surprised to feel somewhat easier after the first application. The use of only one-third of a bottle perfectly cured me. From a state of complete helplessness, I am now just as strong and healthy as ever, and gladly give all the praise to that wonderful remedy, St. Jacobs Oil.
