Hancock's Inspirator

IS THE MOST ECONOMICAL APPLIANCE KNOWN for feeding boilers or pumping purposes on account of the great range of capacities and the small expenditure of steam required for working it. It is intended to take the place of Pumps and Injectors and may be used with a saving to great advantage. It differs in every important detail from its

Construction & Working Qualities

from the class of inner feeders known as injectors, inasmuch as it has one set of tubes for lifting and another set of tubes for forcing water, the combination entirely new, reliable and efficient. They are simpler to operate, always ready for use and allowed to be a very reliable feed for boilers.

PAMPHLETS OF INSTRUCTION furnished on application, also testimonials if required. We guarantee every Inspirator according to recommendation or no charge.

THE GIRLS.

Hear the laughter of the girls—
Pretty girls!
What a fund of merriment each ruby lip unfurls!
How they chatter, chatter, chatter
In the balmy air of night!
While the stars that over-spatter,
All the heavens hear their clatter
In a sort and mild delight;
Keeping time, time, time,
In a sort of ringing rhyme,
To the tintinnabulation that, unceasing, ever purls
From the girls, girls, girls girls,
Girls, girls, girls
From the wild, capricious, saucy, jaunty girls.
See the flirting of the girls,
Radiant girls!
How the softened brain of lover wildly whirls!
Through the mazes of the ball,
Up and down the stately hall!
How he skips to and fro
And perspires!
Would that we could tell the idiot all we know
Of the fires
Into which the false one hurls
Each new victim—see the flame—how it swirls!
How it curls!
How it curls!
Better for that they were churls,
Than fall victim to the girls;
To the prattle and the rattle
Of the girls, girls, girls,
Or the girls, girls, girls, girls,
Girls, girls, girls—
To the sacking and heart racking of the girls!

EGYPTIAN ARMY.

Force at Arabi's Command, and Composition of the Corps—Egypt's Military System.

The probable strength of the present Egyptian army has been so variously estimated, and sometimes so grossly exaggerated, that an account of its past history and actual condition may just now be useful. Such an account has been published in the last two numbers of the Revue Militaire de l'Etranger, a paper which represents the views of the French Staff, and has the advantage of a knowledge of all the reports sent in by French officers. There is probably no more authentic description in existence, and its facts, if not its opinion, may be accepted without question. No sooner had Ismail come to the throne than he set himself to reverse the work of his predecessors and return to the ways of Mehemet Ali and Ibrahim. Said had allowed the material to decrease, but increased the number of men without organizing them or instructing the officers. Ismail did not pretend to keep up the same number of soldiers, but put them on a better and more rational footing, while he accumulated an immense supply of arms and placed the system of fortresses in good order. Said

AMONG HIS MANY CHANGES

actually reduced the army at one time to a strength of 1,800 men, all of them youths. Ismail augmented it to such a point that he was able finally to send 25,000 to assist the Sultan in Crete, while maintaining an active force for the invasion of Abyssinia. Europeans, methods of instruction were introduced both for officers and men. Primary and preparatory schools led up to the military school properly so-called, through which commissions were obtained. Four hundred youths were distributed through a battalion of infantry, a squadron of cavalry, and a battery of artillery, to learn their work, and even a staff school was formed, French officers being employed to place the army on a proper footing. Unfortunately for Egypt she had mistaken the nation to which she should have applied for teachers. Turkey has been wiser in these last days. It is true that the army was greatly improved, but the expense was not calculated, and a collapse, financial and political, resulted from the extravagance of Ismail. Tewfik succeeded to the throne which had become more detached from dependence on Constantinople, but depended for its very life on economy. The army had to be reduced again, but by this time a real system had been possible before long to produce a cheap army fully sufficient for

ALL THE NEEDS OF EGYPT.

This system was the same as is practiced throughout the whole of Continental Europe. It was based on obligatory general service, short in the ranks, long in the reserves. The duration of active service was fixed at four years in the land army and six years in the navy. After this period of activity would come five years in the Redifs and six in the Reserves. Thus, in time, by recruiting youths and passing them through the ranks, and keeping the battalions, &c., small in time of peace, a good army might have been formed of the modern type, starting with a fixed peace strength of 18,000 men. The law of recruitment was promulgated in 1880, and in 1881 a new military law was issued leaving the re organization of the army on this principle and on this strength. But the scheme was illusory because money did not exist to carry it out in its integrity. Egypt must either resign the hope of forming a large army or proclaim itself bankrupt by not paying its creditors. The former course was chosen, and the army, which was allowed to sink to about 11,000 men, was naturally discontented—that is to say, the officers were discontented, and especially the Colonels whose wish was to return to the state of things which we have described as existing in the time of Ibrahim and Abbas, when the Colonels were everything and military examinations a sham. It should, therefore, be understood that the strength of the army given by the Revue Militaire de l'Etranger as 17,700 men is fictitious, and only represents the theoretical organization. According to it the active army would have eight regiments of infantry—12,000 men—formed in four brigades, with an army of reserve and a territorial army, each composed of the same number of regiments as the active army. Thus there ought to be three times the list of troops shown below: Eight regiments of infantry, 12,000 men; three regiments of cavalry, 1,500; two regiments of field artillery, 1,200; three regiments of artillery for coast defences, 2,600; four sections of torpedoes, 800; one Company of engineers, 100—total, 17,000.

BUT WHEN WE COME TO FACTS,

it appears that in 1881 there were only six regiments of infantry, 9,000 men; two regiments of cavalry, 1,000; one regiment of field artillery, 600; one regiment of coast artillery,
