AYER'S HAIR VIGOR,

FOR

Restoring Gray Hair to its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition all turn the hair gray and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and established; thin hair thickens; and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is prized for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

A HOUSE TO LET.

"Is this house to let?" asked Miss Cornelia Colebrook, gently but firmly.

"No, ma'am, it ain't," answered the old colored man who shuffled to the door and held it open just exactly three quarters of an inch.

"But you must be mistaken, my good man," said Miss Colbrook, in accents of gentle remonstrance. "There is a bill on the side of the door."

"No, ma'am, dar ain't," said the old negro. "We's ain't goin' fur to move dis year."

"Come out here and look for yourself," said the young lady, resolutely, and old Julius, stepped out side, was confronted with the black inscription. "To Let," on white ground, pasted up alongside the door.

"Well, I neber!" said Julius. Who done pu dat ar? Mus' be some practical joke Marse John's young college friends is playin'on him. Can't be nuffin else!"

Miss Cornelia looked fixedly at Julius.

"My man," said she, "this won't do at all."

"What won't do, ma'am?" demanded the old man in surprise.

"All this!" said Cornelia. "I must see the house. It is advertised "To Let," and I have a right to go over it. I know all the circumstances of the case.

Listen. Your master is deranged. You are not so much his master as his keeper. The landlord has received repeated complaints from the neighbors and is determined that you shall go at all hazards. I was told that I would have difficulty in getting in. But I am not one easily discouraged from completing a thing which I have once attempted. So stand aside please, and allow me to enter."

And old Julius, overpowered by this torrent of words, was forced to surrender.

Miss Cornelia Colebrook was a plump, pretty girl of four or five-and-twenty, with dark gray eyes, fringed and solemn, a firm, square chin, with one dimple in it, and her cheeks like roses. Old Julius stared at her in blank dismay.

"Julius," called a deep and not unmusical voice over the stairs, "who is there? What is the matter? Why are you detained so long?"

"Marse John, I clar to gracious. I don't know, groaned Julius. It's a young lady, and she would come in. And she is determined to go ober de house. And I ain't done tidied up yet, and—"

At this a tall, rather handsome gentleman came down stairs in a velvet cap and a crimson dressing robe lined with old gold plush.

("Lunatics always like bright colors, I've heard," thought Cornelia.)

"May I inquire what has procured us the honor of this call?" he politely asked.

"This house is to let. I wish to go over it."

"About its being to let you are mistaken," said the gentleman, politely. "I have a three years' lease of it."

"But there is a bill up," urged Cornelia.

"Then it is through some mistake of the real estate agent," said the gentleman.

"I wish to see the house," firmly repeated Cornelia.

"But—"

"I wish to see the house," she reiterated.

The gentleman smiled.

"In that case," he said, "it would hardly be gallant to oppose a lady's desire. Julius, escort the lady wherever she wishes to go."

"Walk dis way, ma'am please," said the old negro, and with a thrill of triumph at her heart Cornelia followed him.

A very pretty little house it was, with parlours hung with pictures, deep colored plush draperies, odd bits of tapestry; a library well stored with sumptuous sets of volumes, dark wood book cases, and leathered upholstered easy chairs; and studio, where piles of canvasses stood against the wall, an easel was dragged into the middle of the floor, and a lay figure in an imperial ermine robe, made Cornelia stare back at first, before she realized that it was only a wooden counterfeit. She turned with a smile to Julius.

"Your master is an artist?" said she.

"Yes, ma'am," nodded the old man.

"Is he generally pretty quiet and docile?"

"Bless your soul, honey," said Julius, "yes. Why shouldn't he be?"

"Lunatics are apt to be violent at times," observed Miss Colebrook, mildly. "They turn dangerous when one least expects it."

"Ma'am!" said Julius, his eye-balls rolling like ivory spheres in his head.

"Has he been so all his life?" said Cornelia.

"Been how, ma'am," asked Julius.

"Crazy, of course," nodded Miss Colebrook.

"He ain't crazy, ma'am!" shouted the ancient negro in desperation, "nor nebber wasn't."

"My good man," said Cornelia, mildly, "it is no use to attempt to blind me with regard to these matters. I know all about them."

"Bless my heart," cried old Julius, tugging with both hands at his white wool, "if I doesn't believe we's all gone crazy togedder, an' I is de maddest ob de lot!"

"It doesn't signify," said Cornelia. "Only I wish you to comprehend that I am not to be deceived. I like the looks of the house very much. I think I'll take it. The rent is—"

"But I assure you, ma'am," said the gentleman himself, who now appeared on the stage, leading a magnificent stone colored English hound by a silken cord, "it is not to let!"

"I will take the house," said Cornelia, with a pitying glance at this modern Hamlet. And then she courtesied low and left the place, rather glad to have escaped without a personal encounter with the crazy man.

"I dare say the neighborhood will be glad to get rid of him," she thought. "But really he was very pleasant and gentlemanly. I feel very sorry for his unfortunate mental infirmity."

She went down to Mr. Lettem, the real estate agent.

"Mr. Lettem," she said, "I've determined to take No. 96 Portland Place."

"No. 96 Portland Place," repeated Mr. Lettem, fitting a pair of ponderous silver spectacles across the bridge of his nose and opening one of the pile of gigantic ledgers. "96—Port—land—Place! But 96 Portland Place isn't on our list, Miss Colebrook. It's 94!"

"But you sent me there!" cried Cornelia, jumping off her chair in a sort of panic.

"I don't think I could possibly have done such a thing," said Mr. Lettem. "The house placed in our hands by the landlord was No 94; of that I am quite certain. James!" to a long legged, lank faced boy who was teasing the cat in the front office, "what house was that you put the bill on in Portland Place this morning?"

James turned red to the very tips of his ears.

"I forgot whether you said 94 or 96 when I got there, boss," confessed he, twisting himself into all manner of apologetic shapes, "so I put one on both houses."

Mr. Lettem caught up his boot jack with an exclamation of wrath; James ducked behind the desk, and Miss Colebrook uttered a cry of dismay.

"There," she cried, wringing her hands, "I've been to the wrong house!"

"No, 94 was the one," said Mr Lettem, still with vengeful eyes fixed on the unlucky James.

"And I went to 96—and I asked the respectable colored man there all about his master's insanity," said poor Cornelia. "Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do?"

"Go back and explain matters," suggested the agent.

"Never," said Cornelia.

And she went away in tears, and the agent did not let any of his houses, for nothing could have persuaded Miss Colebrook to go back to Portland Place.

It happened that she was that evening engaged at a little "parlor musical" at the residence of her friend, Mrs. Overbaugh.

"I am sure I can never sing 'Les Belles Vennoises' after all I've gone through to-day," said Cornelia. "But I shall have to try."

But the very first person she saw in the crowded drawing-room after she had exchanged greetings with her hostess, was the crazy man of 96 Portland Place!

"Do come here, Mr. Melton," said Mrs. Overbaugh, radiently, "and let me introduce you to Miss Colebrook. Cony, this is Mr. John Melton, the artist."

Cornelia turned scarlet as he bowed to her.

"Oh," she cried, "Can you ever forgive me for the terrible blunder I made this morning? It was the wrong house that the stupid man had put the bill on, and I supposed that you were the lunatic who lived in No. 94."

"Pray don't mention it," said Mr. Melton; "or if you remember it at all, remember it as merely a joke."

"But are you sure you forgive me?" said Miss Colebrook, imploringly.

"Quite sure," said Mr. Melton.

And then he led her to a comfortable seat behind a great lemon tree, and brought her some ice-water, and she never sang "Les Belles Vienneises" half so well as she did that night!

"How do you like her?" said Mrs. Overbaugh, confidently to Mr. Morton.

"She is charming," said Mr. Melton, confidentially to Mrs. Overbaugh.

And when the music was over he went to sit by her again, and told her of a little bay-windowed cottage in Harlem which he knew was "to let."

"And I think it will suit you exactly," said he. "But I would not advise you to rent No. 94. That poor lunatic has pulled the place all to pieces, and the landlord refused to make any repairs. Shall I go with you to look at the place to-morrow?"

"Oh, I should be so much obliged," said Cornelia. "Mamma is an invalid, you see, and I have to do all the house-hunting by myself."

So they went together—and Miss Colebrook engaged the house. And they became excellent friends, and Mr. Melton often came up to Harlem to call on the two ladies. And when next May day came around there wasn't any Miss Colebrook, she was Mrs. John Melton.

"And is all done come ob dat lucky mistake ob Miss Conny's," said Julius, rolling his yellow-white eye-balls in great satisfaction.

Hymenial Notes.

On the 24th inst., at Smith's Falls, a popular matrimonial union was effected by Mr. Robert Brodie and Miss Henrietta Lamb. Mr. J. R. Lavell, M.A., late of Kingston, was one of the groomsmen.

On Wednesday last Mr. William Stafford, ex-Warden of the united counties of Leeds and Grenville, "crossed the Rubicon" by marrying Miss Inez L. Forrester. Among the invited guests at the wedding feast were the former Kingstonians, Dr. and Mrs. Horton, of Lyn.

We notice the marriage in St. Catharines of Mr. G. M. Neelon, only son of Sylvester Neelon, M.P.P., to Miss Arnold, only daughter of Chas. M. Arnold, Manager of the Imperial Bank of that city. The happy couple left for Defiance, Ohio, where Mr. Neelon will take charge of his father's extensive lumber business. The marriage is a very happy one.

Another interesting event in the social circle occurred on the 25th ult. at Colborne. It was the marriage of Mr. R. J. Parker, Station Master at the G. T. RR. Station, Shakespeare, Ont., to Miss Alberta B. Spafford. Miss Spafford has many friends in Kingston, having frequently visited at the residence of Mrs. Wm. Bailey, of Colborne street.

Fred Wilson, of North Fredericksburg, was married on Wednesday evening to Miss Effie Jackson, of Napanee, by Rev. J. P. Wilson, Kingston, brother of the groom. The presents were very valuable, one silver set costing $150.

Nathaniel F. Paisley, Napanee, having taken unto himself a life partner in the person of Miss Addie Douglass, of Tamworth, a young lady of prepossessing looks and high musical attainments, is now a subject for congratulation.

COMPLIMENTARY.—The Kingston WHIG now occupies its commodious and handsome new quarters. The WHIG is one of the livest, newiest, most enterprising and readable newspapers of its class. It has always been true to the principle of Reform and hit hard and happily in the interests of the cause. We congratulate our cotem. on further evidences of progression and prosperity, and wish it another half century, at least, of prosperous usefulness.—Peterboro Examiner.

If you wish to avoid great danger and trouble, besides a no small bill of expense at this season of the year, you should take prompt steps to keep disease from your household. The system should be cleansed, blood purified, stomach and bowels regulated, and prevent and cure diseases arising from spring malaria. We know of no thing that will so perfectly and surely do this as Electric Bitters, and at the trifling cost of fifty cents a bottle.—Exch.—Sold by J. Geo. King.

Mr. James J. Anslow, Newcastle, N.B., writes: "Mrs. Anslow was troubled with lung disease, and until he took Northrop & Lyman's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda had little or no appetite; but after taking a bottle or two she gained appetite and had a relish for her food, which was quite a help to her in keeping up against the disease. As we are out of yours and cannot procure any here, she is taking another Emulsion; but as we prefer your preparation to any in the market, will you kindly ship me some at once and oblige."
