Hancock's Inspirator

IS THE MOST ECONOMICAL APPLIANCE KNOWN for feeding boilers or pumping purposes, on account of the great range of its duties, and the small expenditure of steam required for working it. It is intended to take the place of Pumps and Injectors and may be used in their stead to great advantage. It differs materially, both in its

Construction & Working Qualities

from the class of boiler feeders known as injectors—inasmuch as it has one set of tubes for lifting and another set of tubes for forcing water—a combination entirely new, reliable and efficient. They are simple to operate, always ready for use and altogether a very reliable feed for boilers.

PAMPHLETS OF INSTRUCTION furnished on application, also testimonials if required. We guarantee every Inspirator according to recommendation or no charge.

RHEUMATISM!

Lattimore, Ont., Sept. 20, 1881.

Dear Sir—I write to inform you that your RHEUMATIC CURE has made some most remarkable cures, which seemed to baffle the efforts of some of the best and most experienced physicians in our country. Were it necessary, I could give the names of many individuals who have been cured by taking this medicine. In my own case it has certainly worked wonders in curing me of the Rheumatism, after having been troubled with it for years. I am not one to recommend anything to the favorable notice of the afflicted until I have first experienced the benefit of it myself. Having done this I can unhesitatingly declare that for Rheumatism there is no remedy that can afford such speedy relief as your preparation for Rheumatism. Yours, &c.,

OLD AND YOUNG.

They soon grow old who grope for gold
In marts where all is bought and sold
Who live for self and on some shelf
In darkness vault hoard up their pelf
Cankered and crusted over with mould
For them their youth itself is old.

They never grow old who gather gold
Where spring awakes and flowers unfold
Where rivers arise in joyous skies
And fill the soul within their cries
For them the immortal birds have sung
For them old age itself is young. —Sentinel.

NO WONDER SHE CAN ACT.

Romance at Genevieve Ward—The Deserted Wife of a Russian Noble—Pleading Her Cause With the Czar.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A friend who has known Genevieve Ward for many years, gave, the other day, a brief sketch of her life, which shows what determination, ambition, and honorable self-respect can accomplish in this world. Miss Ward's father was appointed American Consul to Bristol, England, a number of years ago. He took his family with him, and made use of the opportunity to give his daughter all the advantages of foreign education. Gifted with unusual linguistic talent, she mastered, in a few years, no less than seven languages, a feat that people who have only a smattering of one or two can form no idea of the difficulty of.

Vocal music she was passionately fond of, and being gifted with a clear, sweet mezzo soprano, she resolved to fit herself for the lyric stage and gain an independent livelihood. After devoting considerable time to the study of music, she made her debut, but the result convinced her that she had over-estimated her musical abilities, and she returned to retirement to consider a fresh move. At this time she was in the bloom of early womanhood, considered unusually fine looking, thoroughly educated and accomplished, and possessed of charming manners. Her society was sought for both at home and in London, where she frequently visited, and it was in the latter place she met a wealthy Russian Count, who was being

FETED IN FASHIONABLE CIRCLES.

He was a perfect man of the world, handsome, elegant, intelligent, unusually intellectual, and of winning demeanor. He frequently encountered the young American lady in society. A mutual admiration and love sprang up between them, which ended in a marriage that was considered felicitous in the extreme by their friends in common. The first year of their wedded life seemed to pass smoothly enough, and certainly plenty of money, talent, refined society and travel added their quota to the happiness of the young couple. Twelve months then had passed away when the handsome Count told his wife that he had received a telegram from Russia, demanding his presence on matters of importance connected with his estate. He assured her that his absence would be short, and that only the severity of his native climate prevented his taking her with him. So the next day he drove to the train wrapped in his sables, and his fair young Countess settled down to a quiet, domestic life without a distrustful thought. Week after week rolled by, the Count did not return—after which statement I suppose my readers will consider his strawberry leaf purely artificial, or, in short, his title bogus, but such a conclusion would be most mistaken. His rank and nobility was settled beyond dispute, and his estates could not be counted on the fingers of one hand. Nevertheless, when the weeks rolled into months, and letters dwindled down to a few lines and finally ceased to come, his wife was filled with vague anxiety and alarm, terminating in horror and indignation, when she learned, accidentally, that her husband, taking advantage of the Russian law, which only acknowledges marriage in the Greek church, had repudiated her and formally

DENIED THE MARRIAGE.

The Countess took care to secure the information before she took any steps. As soon as she had ascertained its truth, she showed the native force and decision of her character, which back of circumstance in her life had never shown out before. Accompanied by her brother she started at once for St. Petersburg, and, when the long and fatiguing journey was over, installed herself in a quiet hotel. She then devoted all her energies to procuring an interview with the Czar, and after surmounting an incredible number of difficulties and formalities, obtained the promise of an audience.

When the day came on which she felt her whole future depended she drove to the palace unattended save by her maid, and dressed in severe black, without any of the accessories of art that another and more frivolous woman would have used in the hopes of softening the heart of royalty through her charms, ushered into the imperial presence. Though pale and deeply agitated, she began her story with composure, but as she proceeded her calmness deserted her, and unconsciously she threw into her narrative all the pathos, the shame, the horror of a pure woman who suddenly found herself torn from a position of honor and respect to one which the world refused to recognize as that of either maid, wife, or widow, and she ended with a petition that the Czar would command justice to be done. The monarch listened with close attention, and asked a few pertinent questions, which she answered without hesitation and with proofs of her veracity. Then, without giving any decision he requested her to retire to an adjoining apartment for an hour. Of course she complied, and spent sixty anxious and unhappy moments alone. At the end of that time she was summoned again into the audience chamber where sat the Czar, and kneeling before him

HER UNFAITHFUL HUSBAND.

With a kind and protecting gesture "the little father" beckoned the Countess to approach, and said: "Madame, I have given the Count your husband the alternative of two winters in Siberia or a marriage with you to-morrow according to the forms of our holy church; he has wisely chosen the latter." The audience was over, and as the Countess withdrew the Czar expressed the doubt that after the wedding she should appear at court. Once free from the restraint of the royal presence the humiliated husband attempted to exonerate himself, but the wife replied only by the request that when the preparations were completed he would inform her of the hour appointed for the ceremony. The wish was complied with, and on the following day, in the presence of a number of witnesses and in the chief church of the city, they were married. When the holy rites were ended those present, who had supposed that this was the beginning of a new married life to be followed by a residence in Russia were astounded to see the bride who had gone through the ceremony with blanched features turn to her twice wedded husband and inform him in clear, unfaltering tones that henceforth they were separated forever, and that never in this world should they meet again. With cold dignity she suppressed the remonstrances of her friends, and two hours later, with her mother, was en route for England. Some have called this a woman's revenge, but it deserves a better name. Genevieve Ward loved the man she married, but she was as well as a good one; that she cared neither for a title nor money has been proved by her rejection of both; but outraged as a wife and a woman, she took the only course to maintain her self-respect and that of others. After this event she devoted herself to the dramatic art, and made a remarkable debut in Paris, where her French was considered so perfect that at first the critics refused to believe her a foreigner. Later she appeared in London and after a number of mishaps through bad managers and unpopular plays, her efforts with success and appreciation. As a woman there is no one on the stage, either at home or abroad, with a more enviable reputation. Like all actresses she is a trifle superstitious, and wears an amulet made of Siddons' hair round her neck, and whenever she plays a tress from the great tragedian's head is pinned in with her own.

A PROUD WOMAN

Whooping Cough and Consumption.

Frank Jones Herr, of Keyport, N. J.

"This certifies that I was for many years afflicted with a disease of the lungs, until I became so weak that it was with difficulty I could walk. My cough during this time was very severe, causing me frequently to raise great quantities of blood, attended with profuse night sweats. After using various remedies to no purpose, I was advised to try Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I did so, and before using the first bottle I was entirely restored to perfect health and strength. I would also mention that this Balsam cured a little girl of mine of a severe attack of whooping cough, when her life was given over by the physician, and all other remedies had failed."
