Hancock's Inspirator

IS THE MOST ECONOMICAL APPLIANCE KNOWN for feeding boilers or pumping purposes, on account of the great range of its duties and the small expenditure of steam required for working it. It is intended to take the place of Pumps and Injectors and may be used in their stead to great advantage. It differs materially, both in its

Construction & Working Qualities

from the class of boiler feeders known as Injectors, inasmuch as it has one set of tubes for lifting and another set of tubes for forcing water—a combination entirely new, reliable and efficient. They are simple to operate, always ready for use and altogether a very reliable feed for boilers.

PAMPHLETS OF INSTRUCTION furnished on application, also testimonials if required. We guarantee every Inspirator according to recommendation or no charge.

Dear Sir,—I write to inform you that your RHEUMATIC CURE has made some most remarkable cures, which seemed to baffle the efforts of some of the best and most experienced physicians in our country. Were it necessary I could give the names of many individuals who have been cured by taking this medicine. In my own case it has certainly worked wonders in curing me of the Rheumatism, after having been troubled with it for years. I am not one to recommend anything to the favorable consideration of the afflicted until I have first experienced the benefit of it myself. Having done this I can unhesitatingly declare that for Rheumatism there is no remedy that can afford such speedy relief as your preparation for Rheumatism. Yours, &c.

OUR LITTLE GIRL.

Oh mamma, mamma, it's half past eight!
Where are my rubbers? I shall be late!
And where is my pocket? I know just where I laid it down, but it is not there.
Oh, here is my bag, with my books all right!
The glad recess moments were perfect last night!
And now I'm off—there's a kiss—good bye!
And out of the door I scamper by.

I stand at the window and watch her go,
Swinging her school bag to and fro.
And I think of a little girl I knew
A long way back, when the years were few!
And the old red house beneath the hill,
Where I went to school. I see it still.
And I make for the child a little moan,
For her face, through the mist, is like our own.

The hours go by—it is half past two
And here comes Nell, with her schoolmate Sue.
They had their lessons; they both were aces.
There are no happier girls alive.
They laugh and shout, and in and fro
Through every room in the house they go.
The music teacher will come at four.
But they can play for an hour or more.

It is evening now, and with look sedate,
Our little maid, with her book and slate,
Comes near the room. We chatter and read.
But she to be "perfect" must work indeed.
No need to be talking in days like these.
Of the early birds and their beds.
There's work enough, and don't you fall?
There's quite too much for girls like Nell.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST MISSIONS.

Special Sermons by Rev. G. Baker of Collingby, and Rev. T. W. Jolliffe—Types and Illustrations.

The annual missionary sermons were preached in the Primitive Methodist Church yesterday. In the morning Rev. G. Baker, of Collingby, one of those ordained at the last General Conference in this city, occupied the pulpit, and founded his discourse upon St. Matthew v. 14, 15, 16.

"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle and put it on a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it gives light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

In these words it was learned that Christians were a blessing to the world. The verses were connected one with another. The word "light" was found in every one of them. At the beginning it was best to understand what was meant by "world." In scripture Christ was shown to have said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul" meaning its wealth, vanity, pomp, and applause. Again Christ told his disciples that in the world they would have tribulations—those of the flesh, the evil of their own nature, the persecution of the ungodly. In the text "world" had a different signification. It referred to the moral world, in which darkness prevails, as evidenced by the heathenism and idolatry of China, Africa and India, and the sinfulness of Europe and America. Everywhere there was darkness, even in Kingston. Sin is darkness; godliness is light. Christ compares Christians to planets. He is the great light of the world, the "sun of Righteousness," and as the sun is the centre of the solar system He is the centre of the Christian system. From Him they borrow their purity of character, holiness of life, sweetness of disposition. Like the moon and the planets Christians have no light in themselves. The moon reflects the light of the sun, and the Christians shew that they walk in the light of Jesus; otherwise they stumble on and at last stumble into hell. Like the moon, too, he remarked that Christians needed light in order to illuminate others, and that the further they were from the world the less danger they were in of being affected and perhaps eclipsed by it. Christians (2) were as a city set upon a hill, high and sublime. They could not be hid, and they could only attain unto it by much striving and fighting and difficulty, by what St. Paul termed "high calling." Christianity was not half appreciated. Like the holy city it was conspicuous and calculated to favourably impress those coming in view. Again the Christians were compared to candles. They got their light from Christ. The love which burns on the altars of their hearts they get from Him. St. John says, "We love Him because He first loved us." The candlestick mentioned in the text was undoubtedly the Church, and the several denominations were the branches there of. He spoke, in conclusion, of how men should let their lights shine before men, not merely in the church, at the prayer and class meetings, but everywhere; they should shine as do the planets, always, and upon all accessible to or near them. They lived in a dark world, but God gave to each a light wherewith to shine. Its brilliancy depended upon themselves.

Brightly beams the Father's mercy
From the lightthouse over more,
But to us he gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore.

He pointed out that the giving of one's substance to promote the missionary cause was one grand method of letting one's light so shine before men that they might see their good works and glorify the Father in heaven.

The Evening Service.

In the evening Rev. T. W. Jolliffe preached upon the expansion of the church as typified by the vision of the holy waters recorded in Ezekiel xlii. He briefly commented (in the introduction) upon the fact that sin was associated with darkness, religion with light; hence the scriptural declaration; referred to in the morning sermon, that Jesus was the light of the world. Sin was associated with sorrow; religion with joy, and that joy is unspeakable and full of glory. Sin is associated with all that is low mean and vile; religion with all that is grand and uplifting and blessing. The vision of the holy waters is a beautiful representation of the gospel. As a river it has become wider and deeper and in its progress to the ocean diffuses light and life and spiritual energy among the nations. It is also a representation of the results of the preaching of the gospel. An ancient tradition had it that a certain hero died upon the field of battle, and that the place where he fought was marked by a gushing fountain of water. When Christ died upon Calvary there issued from beneath the cross a stream to make glad the city of our God. In this vision the water gradually rose and became deeper and wider the longer it flowed. First it was to the knees in depth, then to the loins and afterwards a mighty river which could not be crossed. The beautiful figure also illustrates upon the world. It has not covered the earth at one sweep but gradually. How many speaking the gospel has not made the advancement which humanity had a right to expect. What had been the reason? In a large measure because the world is not sufficiently alive to the great importance of its presentation and again the amount of wealth laid upon the missionary altar has not been an adequate response to the repeated Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." Still a great deal has been done to the uplifting of humanity. The spiritual blessings of the gospel, however, are more highly prized than any other. The religion of Christ meets the wants and satisfies the deepest longings of every human soul, assuring a man of pardon for his sinfulness, purity for his guilt, rest for his weariness; it reveals the light and majesty as well as the loving kindness of God and affords sympathy in sorrow and hope in despair. The preacher then commented on some of the indirect influences of the gospel upon human institutions and relations. First he noticed its social effects, especially what it has done for woman, making her man's equal instead of a crushed and dependant creature as she is in some countries. It has not only restored her to her place but made children the subjects of loving regard instead of the sacrificial.

THE DIRECT INFLUENCE OF THE GOSPEL

VICTIMS OF IDOLATROUS CUSTOMS.

Christianity is a religion of kindness, and enjoins a care for the sick and needy. It has been truly compared to a tree, which grew upon a river's bank, and the leaves of which were for the healing of the nations; and it is like a river carrying with its spread life and peace and joy. The influence of the gospel on civil liberty was now discussed. It has been said by certain loud mouthed politicians that the bible is the enemy of freedom. Such is not the case; the display of liberty and intelligence in the country where it is preached gives contradiction to the assertion. The bible contains no treatise on civil government, but it lays the axe at the foot of all despotism. Then as to the influence of the gospel upon literature. Read the standard authors and you will be surprised how much the bible has to do with the quantity and quality of literature. Take away from Shakspeare all these brilliant passages alluded to or suggested by the Word of God and you rob him of the greenest leaves of his laurel crown. But for the bible Milton's Paradise Lost would not have been but the echo of Homer, while Paradise Regained would have remained among the things unattempted in prose or thyme. But for the bible the Pilgrim's Progress would not have been written. Take from Wordsworth and Cowper all those brilliant passages in their writings suggested by the bible and you expunge those portions which are grandest and best. Without the bible we might have had the passionate misanthropic shrinkings of Byron. But we should not have had the sweet music of his Hebrew melodies. Without the bible we might have had some of the patriotic odes and songs of Robert Burns, but we would never have heard of his Cottar's Saturday Night. But why say more? Take the

and it is robbed of its glory and bereft of its power. The relation of Christianity to science was shortly considered, instances being named wherein the efforts of the scientist to dispute the accuracy of the bible narrative had signally failed. Christianity and philosophy widely differ, but the latter has gathered her most resplendent trophies when she has taken the former to be her guide, counsellor and friend. Lastly, the influence of religion upon commerce was noted. Since the days of Paul there has been a union between them. Sometimes the trader went before and introduced the missionary, but generally the missionary introduced the trader. Thousands and millions have been thus saved. This led him to make an earnest appeal on behalf of the missionaries. If they were to be sustained there had to be greater liberality than heretofore. The congregation of that church had done nobly, having increased their giving 150 per cent. in five years, last year having subscribed $45 more than in 1875. "Onward" should be their motto.
