LEEDS FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

A Largely Attended and Very Interesting Meeting at Delta.

Last Saturday afternoon a large and representative gathering of farmers assembled in the town hall, Delta, for the purpose of discussing matters of interest to agriculturists. In the absence of the President, who was detained at home by sickness in his family, Mr. Freeman Britton, secretary of the Institute, was voted to the chair.

Mr. W. F. Chapman read the first paper, on the subject of cheese manufacture and the production of good milk. Unfortunately, our reporter did not arrive in the hall until Mr. Chapman had concluded the reading of his paper, and cannot, therefore, give a summary of it. Judging from the discussion which it evoked, the essay must have been both interesting and instructive. There was lively cross firing about the effect of whey upon the production of milk, and its effect upon the quality. It seemed to be the general opinion that feeding whey would increase the flow of milk; but those who had tested the matter thought the quality of the milk was much deteriorated. There was an interesting word or two from Prof. James, on the difficulty of making reliable tests of the purity of milk. Mr. Alex. Atcheson asked a question, which is certainly a live one, with regard to whether some more economical and convenient method of disposing of cheese could not be devised than the present plan of sending a host of salesmen to Brockville once a week.

Mr. Dryden, M.P.P. for South Waterloo, then read a paper on sheep raising. Sheep required less labor and care than any other domestic animals. They were convenient and economical sources of food for the farmer, and were very valuable as the source from which the farmer could get all-wool goods, now fast becoming a luxury. As to the reasons why so few sheep were kept in some localities, he thought that the Conservative tendencies of farmers would partly account for it, while another reason was found in the large number of dogs which infest all localities. Some had ceased to keep sheep because of the small demand for long wool. The best breed to keep was a question difficult of solution. He favored the Downs, the medium wool of which was and is likely to be in good demand. Some localities were too flat and damp for sheep, but he thought the County of Leeds well adapted for the industry.

Considerable discussion followed the reading of the paper. In reply to questions, the essayist said that sheep would not bear confinement; they should be free to come and go. For winter feed he advised clover hay, with small rations of roots, and pea straw if the clover hay failed. When asked whether cows or sheep were the more profitable, Mr. Dryden answered by advising mixed farming in stock as well as the other departments of the farm.

Prof. James, of the Guelph Agricultural College, was next called upon. He delivered an able and interesting address on "The Soil," a summary of which we shall give our readers next week.

EVENING SESSION.

At the evening session there was a large audience, including a fair sprinkling of ladies.

Mr. Chapman was first on the programme, and gave a well written paper on the care of the cow and the proper handling of milk. The essayist is a careful observer and presents his observations to his audience in a lucid manner.

Mr. Dryden gave an address on "The Education of the Farmer's Family," with particular reference to the boys and girls who intended staying on the farm. He laid down the principle that the farmer's son needed education as much as any other man's son did. He referred to the general belief that higher education created distaste for farm work. The belief was to some extent founded on fact; but nevertheless, he would risk the danger and give the boy the education. He deplored the common practice of sending the boy to school, where he was crammed for one examination after the other, to the entire exclusion of all other training. Parents should see to it that the child was trained to habits of industry and thrift, and that the moral and physical natures of their boys and girls were not neglected. At the same time there should be the setting of some task for the boy which he should be taught to do punctually and well. He favored the payment of the children for services rendered, as by that means they would form business habits and would learn to appreciate the value of money. The main point was to get the boy to take a delight in the result of his labor, and then there need be no fear of his desiring to leave the farm.

A short discussion followed the address, after which Mr. Eaton, head master of the Delta schools, was called on for a reading. On taking the platform he said a few words in defence of the public schools, which he thought the preceding speaker had somewhat disparaged. Mr. Eaton made a good point when he said that the extreme niggardliness of the people was responsible for any deficiency in the public schools; for a good, common-sense, moral, educated man, such as was required to impart a good common-sense education, could not be induced to stay in a profession which only yielded from $250 to $350 a year. Mr. Eaton's reading of "Farmer Jones" was received with much applause.

Prof. James came next, with an eloquent address. He censured the cramming system which existed in some of our schools. While a high school teacher he had keenly felt the oppression of being practically obliged by law to push a certain number of candidates through the periodical examinations. The idea of getting the young to take pleasure in their work was a grand one. By doing whatever we do for the general good, instead of for a selfish motive, we would do much to make our daily labor delightful. Some thought that because they did so and so, without educational advantages, their sons could go and do likewise. But what about the altered conditions under which the new generation had to work? He referred to the educational advantages of Germany, where there were twenty fully equipped agricultural experiment stations. Every boy who attended the German public schools was trained physically as well as mentally—to habits of industry as well as to mental activity. Austria had its system of schools of forestry and agriculture; and our Dominion was also doing well along the same lines. But were our farmers taking advantage of the opportunities they had? The members of other callings were clamoring for schools of practical science. Farmers must obtain scientific knowledge and apply it to agriculture, or they could not maintain the position of independence and comparative affluence they had attained. He enumerated the many branches of practical science which must be applied to the operations of the intelligent and successful farmer. Canada had many and strong competitors in the food markets of the world, and her agriculturists must call in the aid of everything which can assist in the cheap production of stock, grain, cheese, butter, etc. He advised the thorough organization of the Farmers' Institutes of the country, as being calculated to confer great benefits upon agriculture.

Miss Nora Stevens recited "The Amen Corner," in excellent style, after which this most successful convention was brought to a close.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

The Result Yesterday in Some of the Townships.

REAR YONGE AND ESCOTT.

The elections passed off very quietly here. The result of the polling was a surprise to many. The resignation of Mr. Taplin at the last moment was, to say the least, astonishing to his friends and supporters at the caucus meeting. We regret that the feeling of antagonism between the village and the township should have lead to so much bitter feeling and acrimony as it did. The people of the village desired a number of local improvements, which as part and parcel of the township they knew very well the representatives from the country would never grant them. Consequently they desired and obtained a separation, which will not, however, come into effect until the first of January, 1890. The decision of Mr. Johnston's friends to press his acceptance of the nomination for Reeve, in opposition to the decision of the caucus, was done more through a feeling of rivalry between the township and village, than from any feeling against Mr. Taplin. High school matters were dragged into the contest, as well, the people from the township charging the villagers with extravagance in conducting the school. This is something in which the people have not and cannot have directly, any voice. The County Council appoints the trustees, and any sum they may ask the Township Council for, must be raised. Therefore, although the council may all be elected in opposition to the village, they can practically do nothing towards reducing the amount raised for the support of the high school. We trust, now that the elections are over, that all will move on harmoniously. Below we give the result of the polling in the different subdivisions. Mr. Moles, whose name appears on the list, resigned before the morning of the election, and his friends were requested to cast their ballots for some of the other candidates. The few scattering votes recorded for him, were probably cast by those who did not know of his resignation.

FROM FAR AWAY NEBRASKA.

A Breezy Letter from a Former Leeds County Man.

FRIEND, Neb., Dec.

EDITOR REPORTER:

Dear Sir,—Having just read through the last REPORTER, my mind is naturally running in a train of thought about old friends and old scenes in connection with your beautiful town. How many pleasant memories come to mind; how many familiar faces come to view. To me it does not seem just the correct thing to call Farmersville by any other name; but as you have decided to change its name I think you have chosen a very pretty and appropriate one—Athens, ancient seat of learning of the Greeks—your city being a modern Athens. I would have called it Wiltse, in honor of that large family of Wiltses that have been identified with Farmersville ever since it had an existence; or Parish, a name interwoven with everything connected with Farmersville; or Taplin, a name easily written; or Cornell—all short, and prominently connected with your city.

The weather here has been so far very fine. The roads are dry, and as dusty as they are in June or July in Canada. It has been a favorable fall to pick corn, and as there is so much of it the more warm and dry weather we have, the better for our corn gathering. We had two hundred acres this season, and have ten thousand bushels. Corn is king in Nebraska.

We have our cattle pasturing in the stalk fields. We turn them out of the corrall in the morning and bring them in at evening. Our horses, 25 head, are living in the corn stalk fields. Our corn crop also furnishes us with nearly all our fuel, in the shape of cobs. We have forty head of cattle in our feed yard now, and a few days ago sent a carload to Omaha. We have also fifty-eight head of stockers that will winter in the stalk fields. We raised forty calves this season. There are also sixty hogs on the place. Our hogs are not like the Irishman's hogs. Did you ever hear the story? An Irishman had 15 or 20 long nosed, hungry hogs. Coming one day from his barn to the house, all of these hogs were following him, and squealing as only a hungry pig can squeal. Pat stopped and looked round at them, and, says he: "For a mess of poor divil's loike yez are, ye're d—d merry." We keep our hogs so busy eating corn that they don't have time to cultivate their musical talents.

Last winter we wintered 125 head of cattle on three hundred acres of stalks.

We also had this season 100 acres of oats, and raised some 4,000 bushels. We have 720 acres of land, every acre of which can be cultivated. There is not a stone as big as a hen's egg on the whole place. There is a railroad three miles south of us, another three miles west, and another six miles north. Our railway facilities are better than they were in Canada. At Friend, the town at which we do most of our business, they have ten trains per day, and a cattle train every day. I have counted 36 cars of cattle in one train, and the agent tells me there are seldom less than twenty.

We are 90 miles from Omaha, a second Chicago for cattle and hogs, there being large packing houses there. Lincoln, the capital of the State, is 40 miles distant. Friend has 2,000 inhabitants, four banks, two elevators, three hardware stores, six dry goods stores, three weekly papers, three clothing and two boot and shoe stores, also four implement houses and three barber shops, and other businesses in proportion. * * * I am contented and doing fairly here. I like the soil here better than in Canada. We have good people, and, as all must admit, a good government. Notwithstanding all this, I will never forget Canada or her people. Wishing you success in all your undertakings.

Yours, etc.
DANIEL BLANCHARD.

Address and Presentation.

Mrs. Blackburn, whose terrible accident last June will be remembered by our readers, has had a very dreadful experience since then. For months she lay in a condition between life and death, suffering very acutely all the while. During the last few weeks there has been a decided improvement in her state, and on a few occasions she has been able to go out for a drive. Her ultimate recovery is now a question of time only. On New Year's day Mrs. Blackburn received the accompanying address and a purse of $50. The address and Mrs. Blackburn's reply, written by her own hand, will explain themselves:—

THE ADDRESS.

Dear Mrs. Blackburn,—Please accept this token of sympathy and respect from your undersigned friends and sympathizers, with the prayer that you may by the blessing of Almighty God be speedily restored to your wonted place amongst us, and that your life may long be spared to see the return of many happy New Years.

MRS. BLACKBURN'S REPLY.

I was the recipient of an address, with a purse of $50, on New Year's Day. It was presented by Mr. Fisher, who very kindly spent the day in calling upon our neighbors, who cheerfully responded. There are no words in the English language strong enough to express my deep and heartfelt gratitude to my relatives, and neighbors, for their kindness and sympathy during my sad and painful affliction. I am very thankful to know that I have had the united prayers of God's people, that the means used by the doctors might prove effectual, and that my life might be spared yet a little while to my family. I believe that God, in his great mercy and loving kindness, answered those prayers. I do not know whether it would be agreeable or not to Drs. Cornell & Cornell for me to say anything about them; but this I might say, that I believe that through their untiring patience and indefatigable care, they were the means in God's hands of saving my life. I would assure all who have been so kind that my account and sincere prayer to God is that all choicest blessings may ever rest upon them, in sincerity and truth.

SARAH A. BLACKBURN.

The school trustee election at Moore's School House (back of Addison) has been declared void by Inspector Kenney, who has ordered a new election, to take place on Saturday next. We do not know the grounds upon which the election was decided.
