

New art collection comes to Oakville Trafalgar Memorial Hospital

The work of the Oakville Trafalgar Memorial Hospital (OTMH) Art Council continues with a new exhibition called Crafted.

The exhibition pays attention to traditional crafts and harkens back to an era of careful handwork such as weaving. It features notable artists such as Jay Wilson, who is also a professor at Sheridan College, Ed Pien and Marie Heintzman.

Also on display are works by famed photographers Berenice Abbott and Edward Burtynsky, as well as art by the legendary First Nations painter Norval Morrisseau.

Although the work is entertaining for patients and visitors who come to the hospital, the art serves a more serious purpose. Halton Healthcare is integrating art into its programs, especially those targeted to seniors, and using the power of creative works to help heal patients.

The new collection of loaned and donated art is on display until December. Tour guides are available online at www.haltonhealthcare.com or at the visitor information desk.
