MR. McGEE'S PHILLIPIC ON THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

(From the Mirror of Parliament.)

The Speaker put the question on the first clause of the address.

Mr. McGee said he did not intend to speak and should not have spoken had it not been the impression of many minds that the first paragraph of the address should not go to the public without an expression of opinion from honorable gentlemen generally. That paragraph, as they were all aware, had reference to the visit to Canada of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. It would be in the recollection of Mr. Speaker—for no one had been more concerned in bringing about this desirable result than himself—that the address of both Houses was agreed to with great unanimity on all sides Therefore, what he would desire to express now—he did not know whether honourable gentlemen on his side of the House would agree with him—was that, if his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales should, by the command of Her Majesty, and under the advice of her constitutional advisers, visit Canada, it was highly desirable that he should be received by all classes of Her Majesty's subjects with invariable good-will—not, he would say, with perfect kindness, but with hearty good-will. In the imperial point of view, his Royal Highness' visit was, no doubt, to increase the good feelings existing between this colony and the mother country; and also, to impress the people of the United States with the value of monarchial institutions. As regarded ourselves, the object of the visit was, no doubt, to make an advertisement. As regarded the Grand Trunk Railway Co., their object was, no doubt, to make money.—(Cries of "Oh!") There was no question about the matter, although honorable gentlemen might cry "Oh!" But, whatever might be their object, the object of imperial statesmen—the men who looked before and after—was to increase the attachment between Canada and the mother country. Well, that being so, he wished to say, as one of the representatives of the city where his Royal Highness would probably be first and most prominently introduced to the people, that if his Royal Highness was to be chaperonied by a person standing between the people and his Royal Highness; and whom the people thoroughly detest—if his Royal Highness' visit was merely made the instrument of rebuilding the popularity of an unpopular Governor-General—it were really better that his Royal Highness should not visit the Province. (Cries of "Shame!")

Mr. Speaker—There was no allusion to his Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. McGee—Why, it was his Excellency's speech that was the order of the day, and he (Mr. McGee) was speaking to it. (A laugh.) But he would repeat, although the decorum and gravity of the chair might compel Mr. Speaker to call him to order, he thought it better that the members of the house should plainly understand that if the future king of England, and future ruler of all her Majesty's dominions, came here to make political capital capital for an individual, it were much better that his Royal Highness should not come here. He did not raise this question; but he wished to say that if an unpopular Governor General were to stand between the Prince and the people—if they were to see his Royal Highness made the instrument for whitewashing the double shuffle and the two sets of oaths taken by honorable gentlemen opposite—if, in short, they were to see the visit converted into a political object and a display of flunkeyism, instead of an expression of loyalty to the throne and to the person of the Queen—if they were to see an unpopular Governor General standing between the Prince and the people—then a great deal more mischief than good would be the result.

Mr. Speaker—I must again call the hon. gentleman to order, and I do so because he is infringing the 15th rule of this House. I will read the rule to the hon. gentleman. It is, "That no member should speak disrespectfully of the Queen or any of the royal family, or person administering the government of this Province. (Cries of Chair")

Mr. McGee said he bowed to the decision of Mr. Speaker. He (Mr. McGee) was sorry to be obliged sometimes to say disrespectful things, but it could not be helped. But he would repeat again, though not in the same language, that if they desired to make the reception of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales all that could be wished, it must be borne in mind that there was one thing which the people of this country had not forgotten; and it was very much to be regretted that an accidental state of the colony should involve so important an affair as the visit of the heir apparent. Everybody knew it to be important and everybody felt it to be important. But if it took place under the present circumstances so sure as Mr. Speaker sat there, and so sure as honorable gentlemen sat in their seats, the reception would not be all they could desire it to be. But he desired to give timely notice of his own feeling that nothing could be more unfortunate after the crises of 1858, after the double shuffle, after the double swearing, and after all the perjury and all the crimes which they saw perpetrated.

Mr. Speaker—Order. (Cries of "Chair.")

Mr. McGee—Well—it should be understood that if His Royal Highness came here under the present circumstances, under the advice and protection of the gentleman opposite, and without a Governor-General who had an historic name or an actual name—his reception would not be such as every loyal subject and every attached subject would desire it to be.

Mr. Turcotte—Perhaps you would desire he should come under your protection?

Mr. Gowan had intended to reply to Mr. McGee's speech, but he had been advised that the best way to treat it would be by passing it over in silence. (Hear hear.)
