GREAT BRITAIN FACING A SERIOUS SITUATION.

Never yet was there an industrial strike of any importance that did not mean hardship, hunger, poverty, loss and even death to some. Capital and labour alike suffer from strikes. There are no winners. The general public always bears its share of the burden, and the burden is always a heavy one. There have been few strikes, however, promising such widespread injury as the one commencing this week in Britain. With two and a half million men on strike, with hundreds of industrial activities suspended, with business paralyzed, and the whole course of everyday life handicapped and upset, Great Britain faces a situation that would daunt the boldest spirit. Yet there will be a general faith that Britain will "muddle through" and this danger to the national life will pass, like so many other former perils, to leave Old Britain poorer for the day in pocket, but richer for all time in experience, and winning from the testing time a further progress and stability and one more advance to better things for the people. It is the British way to "muddle through," and turn the apparent losses into actual gains.

The world has become so small that the strike in Britain is of special interest and importance to Canada, to the North Land, to the Porcupine. Without the strike there was a practical certainty that considerable British capital would come to this country this year, especially for investment in mining ventures. The strike may prevent the expected investments here, yet, on the other hand, there may be a tendency for British capital to seek a country where the danger of paralyzing strikes is less apparent than in the homeland. In such a case there may be special impetus given to British investments in Canada. The exact effect of the strike on British capital coming to Canada is thus difficult to forecast with any assurance, though it may be taken for granted that the effect will be noteworthy one way or the other. The world is so small that upheavals in London, England, are felt throughout the globe, either as shocks that disturb or ripples that thrill.

After prolonged negotiations between the representatives of labour and the Government, the futility of all hope for a peaceful settlement was abandoned on Sunday. A general strike order was issued by the labour leaders to five million men. Only about one half of these have responded with the required action, but the miners, all shipbuilders and repair-ers, seamen, dock and waterfront workers, steel and tin trades, railways and engineering trades, iron workers, construction men of various kinds, and a long list of allied trades are now on definite and determined strike. With the coal mines primarily concerned, the strike has become general. It is a situation along the line of the One Big Union plan at Winnipeg some years ago, but the British strike is much better organized and controlled, and infinitely wider in its arrangement and effect.

The situation has arisen from the proposal of the coal mine owners to lower wages from the war-time rates and to increase the hours from the scales obtaining after 1914. Last summer a strike was averted by the granting of Government subsidies to the coal mines. At the same time the Government had a commission investigate the whole coal mining situation and report on the best methods of adjustment. It was believed by the Government that both sides would accept the findings of the commission. The commission reported against a continuation of the subsidies, which have already cost the country $115,000,000.00 in cash direct. The Government viewed with disfavour the proposal for the taking over of the coal mines by the nation. To accept the report of the commission meant a reduction of wages and some increase in hours of labour. This the men would not consider, their motto being: "Not a penny off wages, nor a minute on working hours."

From the standpoint of the men, their case is a strong one. They are simply fighting for the principle of a living wage. Their contention is that under the plans rejected many men with families would be earning no more than five dollars a week. Yet the commission came to the definite and considered conclusion that "costs of production with present hours and wages are more than the industry can bear." The commission's report showed that fully 70 per cent. of all the present coal mines in Great Britain are unprofitable.

While Government and Labour have argued the matter at issue, the general public have been organizing in self-protection. At 115 centres there are said to be effective organizations ready to carry on the maintenance of food supplies and the transportation system. The Government has also been organizing and preparing for the battle. It looks like a bitter fight, with losses all round. It is to be hoped that from it all there will be material gains for the people. Both sides have the advantage of clever leaders. Both sides have given great study to the situation. Both sides have no doubt weighed the costs and judged the principles at stake. At this safe distance it may be easy to give a snap judgment on which side is right and which is wrong. Such a decision, however, is of no avail, and no more than an opinion swayed in most cases more by prejudice than by knowledge. The truth is that about the best that the average man in Canada can do is to sincerely trust that the two contending parties may soon reach a compromise that will remove the possibility of further civil war and assure same way or other an advance in the prosperity and safety of all the people.

IN MEMORIAM

IN LOVING MEMORY of our darling baby, Henrietta Martin, who died May 7th, 1925. Just one year! How swift time flies.

Yet love's sweetest memory never dies. I miss her smile, her baby ways. Though the time was short she spent with us.

We look on them as happy days. One by one, they cross the tide. One by one, they're taken o'er. God grant when he calls us, Who are left behind, We shall meet them there on the other shore.
