80 students or more expected to begin studies at WLU Jan. 2

Eighty or more persons are expected to begin their university education Jan. 2 at Wilfrid Laurier University.

They will be taking advantage of the university's January admission program that allows students to complete two or three full credit courses by April 29. By attending intersession and summer session a student could complete a full university year by early August.

Keith Rae, assistant registrar for admissions, said the January admission program appeals to high school graduates who have been working or travelling, those completing Year 5 in the first semester and have their principal's permission, some from community colleges, adults returning to education, and former WLU students dropping back in to education.

He added that programs are available in general arts, general science, honors arts and honors science.

This is the fourth year that WLU has offered January admission. Last year 52 freshmen and 27 returning students (those who had been away from education but had some university) enrolled.
