APRIL LIBRARY NEWS

MEMORIAL WINDOW

Within the next little while, possibly before this newsletter is printed, the Memorial Library's much-loved stained glass window will be removed from its lofty perch in the tower facing the Cenotaph across Marine Drive. We hasten to assure everybody that its absence will be brief and that it should be back in its accustomed place about four weeks later.

In common with other stained glass windows, ours is suffering from the ravages of wind and weather, and from the challenge of having to support its own great weight over an extended period. It is to be dismantled, cleaned and completely rereaded. On its return it will be shielded from the elements by an acrylic screen rather than the present wire mesh barrier (allowing more light to reach it) and we are looking into the possibility of floodlighting to enhance its visibility at night.

Entitled "Harmony" from a painting by Sir Frank Dicksee (1853 - 1928), the window was constructed early in this century and represents a quality of colouration and shading no longer found in stained glass work. It was presented to the Memorial Library on its opening in 1950 by Mrs. A. Gentles in memory of her brother Horace Gordon Stone, who died on active service in 1918.
