

Thousands Mourn Passing of Dilg, First Waltonian (Contributed)

The death of Will H. Dilg, founder of the Izaak Walton League of America, was noted in the papers last week. Back of this lies the story of a great ideal brought to the public's attention but a few years ago and that developed almost overnight into a powerful organization, nation-wide in scope, and surprising in the constructive work that it has already accomplished.

Dilg, an advertising man, with a keen sense of the dramatic, with an unbounded enthusiasm, and a supreme belief in the idea, found a ready response in every part of the country, from men who loved the woods, men who loved the waters, men who loved the mountains, or the valleys, men who loved the wild life found therein, and he welded these into a national organization having local chapters running into the thousands, and an individual membership counted by the hundreds of thousands.

One of the leagues' accomplishments is the "Wild Game Refuge" bordering the Mississippi river and touching three states. It has been suggested that Will Dilg's final resting place be on one of the high hills looking out over the river and this Game Refuge. It would seem that a fitting memorial there, to the man, and the ideal, would become a shrine to all lovers of this fair country our ours.

Set Up Radio Station to Hear Realty Leader

Having a radio station set up expressly for his speech was the novel experience of Mr. C. C. Hieatt, president of the National Association of Real Estate boards.

Terre Haute, Indiana, wanted to share its opportunity with others, so Station WIBJ was temporarily rigged up to send out Mr. Hieatt's talk on "Why a woman's heart is happiest in a home of her own," given on March 17 at 7:30.

Mr. Hieatt compared American and European homes and showed how the American woman has a wider opportunity to have a home of her own and a more livable one.

Telegrams of congratulation were received by the new station from the radio audience.

Mrs. George Butler and her daughter, Mrs. Percival N. Cutler, 1016 Ashland avenue, left Sunday last for a week's stay at Martinsville, Ind.
