Garden Talks

(Contributed by Wilmette Garden Club)

As you drive through Kenilworth, "loveliest village of the plain," with her tall trees and her artistic lanes, green, shady, and perfect, beautiful though it all is, you are only seeing a little of her beauty from the street.

Hidden behind shrubbery in the back, she has her secret gardens, once dreams, that no one ever sees in merely passing. If you are an earnest lover of gardens and people and beauty, she may lead you through an almost invisible opening in some high hedge, whose branches close behind you and leave you in another world—someone's holy of holies, a secret garden, hidden, like one's dearest hopes, from the eyes of the world.

Many of the branches she drew aside for us last Friday and permitted us, with truest hospitality, to wander at our will through her gardens.

There is a delight in seeing a beautiful garden, but a greater delight in seeing in it, as one does, the manifestations of the character of its maker. Whatever one is, one's garden is, like the expression on one's face. Gentle souls make gentle gardens, kindly souls make kindly gardens, great souls great gardens, original souls original gardens.

Through the hedges the gracious character of Kenilworth may be seen in her gardens.

First Aid Trained "L" Workers Save 8 Lives

The lives of eight persons have been saved by employes of the Chicago Rapid Transit company as a result of the First Aid training of "L" employes under the supervision of the Medical department, according to figures just given out by Dr. Hart Ellis Fisher, chief surgeon. Five of the persons saved were in no way connected with the Rapid Transit organization, and their lives were saved at places removed from company property.

Nine "L" employes have been awarded medals in connection with the saving of these lives, two being honored in one case. Their exploits include resuscitation from drowning, electrical shock and other accidents that undoubtedly would have proven fatal were it not for immediate application of First Aid emergency treatment, Dr. Fisher pointed out. In addition, twenty-four other Rapid Transit employes have received medals for outstanding demonstrations of ability to meet emergencies.

A total of 2,277 Rapid Transit employes have completed the First Aid training course since this organized activity was established on the "L" Lines, the report states. All of these employes have received certificates of graduation from both the American Red Cross and the Rapid Transit management.
