Save the Day!

Kenilworth's response to the Northwestern University Settlement's appeal, "Say it with sandwiches," has been splendid, it is reported. Each Friday morning, the fathers carry their packages of sandwiches to the train and deposit them in the large boxes provided for that purpose. What happens when some busy or forgetful father overlooks his sandwiches? Two of Kenilworth's young and charming matrons greet him at the station with: "Good morning! Don't tell me you've forgotten your sandwiches!" Then follows a hurried telephone conversation with the good wife, and the sandwiches are hastily prepared and little George or Hortense runs them over to the station on his or her bicycle. But this doesn't happen very often—Kenilworth's fathers apparently have very good memories.

When school was in session it was a simple matter to collect sandwiches, because the children were reminded each week of the starving little ones on Chicago's northwest side and as Friday came around, it was a real red letter day. It gave each of them an opportunity to do a practical bit of charity themselves for some starving family, and the committee states that even now, the children make most of the sandwiches themselves, as they did during the school year. They know how good a sandwich tastes when they're real hungry. Haven't they been on many a picnic and aren't sandwiches just the best ever?

The Settlement, according to Miss Harriet Vittum, is caring for hundreds of families whose only square meal each week is sandwiches—and a bit of cake or fruit—which the north shore towns send to them. For the money at their disposal during these strenuous times is woefully inadequate to supply every honest appeal for help—and who can deny a little youngster when he is really hungry!

How many sandwiches should you prepare each Friday? The best way to answer that question is to accompany your husband some morning and see the packages as they are delivered at the station. They range all the way from a half dozen sandwiches and a tasty bit of cake or fruit, which is a square meal for any one person, to large boxes a foot and a half square, which must contain hundreds of sandwiches.

Last Thursday evening at a beach picnic there were enough sandwiches left over among the several families participating to provide a square meal for many children, and you can rest assured that none of them were thrown away. They were all wrapped up neatly and delivered at the station the next morning. Kenilworth expects to continue this good deed straight through the summer months and the committee hopes that every Kenilworth family will be reminded, as the men go to the train on Friday mornings, not to forget their sandwiches. The need is very urgent and the families who receive them without any means of their own whatever are extremely grateful, as is Miss Harriet Vittum and her co-workers in the University Settlement.

Home air conditioning is here—every one is talking about it. And no wonder! Won't it be nice to turn on cool, comfortable air in your home in summer just like you now turn on the heat in winter?

To show you just how these practical new air conditioners work, we've set up in our display rooms the very latest types of air conditioners. You're cordially invited to stop in and see these interesting demonstrations. You may visit a completely equipped office—the coolest spot in town.

We've also set up several types of winter air conditioners which circulate warm, moist air during the heating season.

You won't want to miss this exhibit at the Church Street Public Service Store. So do come over and see it.

How do air conditioners cool air?

How do they circulate it?

Do air conditioners remove excessive moisture?

Does air conditioning clean the air effectively?

Will air conditioners work in winter?

Are air conditioners expensive to install?
