

Daniel Frohman Will Lecture in Evanston

Daniel Frohman, characterized as the "dean of theatrical managers," will appear "in person" Thursday night, November 3, at 8:30 o'clock at Haven school, Evanston, under the auspices of the alumnae and active chapters of Zeta Phi Eta, professional speech arts fraternity, in a "talk" as he prefers to call it, which recalls with intimate knowledge and lively interest the famous plays and players of the American stage for over a period of 50 years.

The Frohman brothers, Charles and Daniel, and their old associate, David Belasco, dominated the theater for almost a generation. Daniel, the last of the famous trio, youthful in spirit as he is rich in memories, carries on the tradition and recalls their struggles and triumphs.

Mr. Frohman takes his audience behind the scenes, and in a talk that abounds in intimate incidents and kindly humor as well as professional experiences, reveals the characteristics and talents of these glamorous figures: tells of their rise to fame, and how they were "discovered" and developed, enables his listeners to share their struggles and triumphs, and to know them as they were in daily life as well as in the footlights' glow.

As president of the Actor's Fund of America, Mr. Frohman maintains his contact not only with the older players which he knew and managed, but with the younger favorites of the present and those just beginning their careers, who look upon him as their counselor and friend. His personal experiences cover more than half a century and his reminiscences are almost like an inside history of the American stage for fifty years and more, it is explained.

Tickets may be purchased at Chandler's, Evanston. Seats are reserved free of charge. Mail orders will be filled on receipt of check sent to Mrs. Martin Slosson, 720 Simpson street, Evanston, it is announced.
