

Minnesota Next Foe in Path of Those Wildcats

Memories of last year's 32 to 14 victory over Minnesota will be recalled by Northwestern's Wildcat football team this week as they prepare to meet the Gophers at Minneapolis this week-end.

Badly beaten in the first quarter, which saw the powerful Minnesota eleven pile up two touchdowns in rapid succession, the Wildcats staged one of the most remarkable comebacks in football history to wrest out a victory in the last quarter.

Almost equalling this performance was the fourth quarter offensive staged by the Wildcats against Purdue last Saturday in which the Purple tied the score at 7 to 7. As in the Minnesota game of a year ago, Northwestern entered the last quarter on the low end of the score but staged a concentrated 67 yard drive that terminated in a touchdown and tied the score.

Hopeful for Title

Wildcats adherents have not counted the team out of the championship running, and figure that a win over Minnesota will keep Northwestern very much in the thick of things. Minnesota, naturally, has the same aspirations, indicating that Saturday's contest will result in another of those typically hard fought engagements that usually materializes when these two teams get together.

Ollie Olson's continued improvement as a line smasher, which added to his kicking and passing abilities joins with Rentner in providing Northwestern's major threats against the Gophers. The fact that this pair is dividing the passing duties has given Northwestern's aerial attack a deceptiveness that nearly proved Purdue's undoing and did avail Northwestern of a chance to tie the Boilermakers.

Must Stop Manders

Against Minnesota the Purple will encounter in Manders a fullback of the same type as Horstman of Purdue. This latter individual ripped the Wildcat line for long gains until the Purple was forced back against its goal line when a sturdy defense averted all but one of Purdue's thrusts. The manner in which Manders tore through Northwestern for two touchdowns last year is still fresh in the minds of all the Wildcats who played in that game.

Northwestern's line will be bolstered up for the Minnesota game by the return of Bob Gonya, star tackle, who was unable to play against Purdue because of a Charley horse. This 200 pound chap would have been welcome indeed if he had been able to get into last Saturday's game, since it was Purdue's success with a spinner play over tackle that nearly proved disastrous to the Wildcat cause.
