Next Balduf Lecture Monday

"Houses of Human Welfare" Is Subject of Psychology Talk at Woman's Club

Dr. Emery W. Balduf will discuss "Houses of Human Welfare" as the next and last in his series of psychology talks on "Personality-Helps and Hindrances to Its Development," Monday morning, January 30, in the small auditorium of the Woman's club at 10 o'clock. His series of four lectures is offered by the child and home department of the Woman's club of Wilmette. The talks are given without charge to club members and to non-members upon payment of a nominal guest fee.

"Our personality is determined early in childhood by emotional idea habits and systems, and personality is the totality of our psychic behavior which is the result of these idea systems," Dr. Balduf emphasized in this third lecture Monday morning which concerned "Psychology as an Open Sesame to Mysteries of Human Nature."

Mothers, he declared, are anxious to have their children have pleasant personalities so they must influence the complexes of a child. "Having a complex is the style now," Dr. Balduf remarked, "and pointing to our neighbors' complexes is a favorite indoor sport of cultured Americans."

Primary urges were then considered. "The two greatest human primary urges," he said, "are freedom from hunger and pain. Both of these are satisfied under ordinary conditions of human life."

"The ego urge, the urge for social recognition, and the sex drive, the mating instinct, are two of the most important considerations in our social organization," Dr. Balduf declared, "so mothers should pay the most attention to the ego urge and sex drive in their children."

With respect to the sex urge he commented that "Knowledge, not ignorance, is the hand maid of virtue and that the full light of day will not hurt the adolescent."

In the effort to satisfy those two urges everyone meets two conflicts, outer and inner, Dr. Balduf pointed out. "Most of the great dramas deal with the inner conflicts," he remarked in illustrating his point. "We meet these conflicts that arise by several psychological methods, avoidance and dissociation and substitute reactions, regression," the speaker announced, and then in describing these urges and conflicts he said that "some repression must be exercised in a monogamous social system."

Dr. Balduf urged that children be taught to be self sufficient and independent and yet to maintain a willingness to help those who are not self sufficient.

The meetings in this course have been of widespread interest and have attracted large audiences.

Another coming activity of the Woman's club of Wilmette is the View day of the Hoosier salon in the Marshall Field galleries at 2 o'clock Thursday, February 2, under the auspices of the art department.
