The Indiana jinx which has stalked Northwestern on the gridiron for a number of years will once again confront the Wildcats when the two teams clash at Dyche stadium Saturday, October 21.

In the last five games between the two schools the Hoosiers have won three and lost two. Each of these three wins were in the nature of upsets since the Wildcats boasted the more impressive record on each occasion.

Even in the last meeting between the two elevens in 1931, the Crimson nearly upset Northwestern's title aspirations. The Wildcats, undefeated in the conference race were forced to come from behind to win 7 to 6. So no wonder that the forthcoming contest is viewed with considerable trepidation in the Purple camp.

Confidence Restored

Last Saturday's scoreless tie with Stanford, however, has done much to restore confidence on the part of the Wildcats. The morale which was badly shaken by the Iowa setback was placed back in good working order by the improvement showed in the game with the strong Pacific Coast team.

Consequently the Wildcats figure that it will take more than the traditional Hoosier jinx to stop them now. Against Stanford the team presented a strong defense and flashed signs of an imposing offense.

Coach Dick Hanley plans to devote the entire week to polishing up the attack in an effort to develop a sustained drive. In the two games played to date the Purple has not scored a touchdown and hopes are high that a scoring spree will be unleashed against the Hoosiers.

Signs of Power

The Wildcat backs displayed signs of being on the verge of going places against Stanford. On several occasions Leeper, Cruice and Duvall reeled off sizeable gains but each time the drives were nipped by intercepted passes. All three of these ball carriers will be counted on for much service Saturday.

The Wildcats are not under any illusions concerning the defensive qualities of the Hoosier eleven. The team possesses one of the strongest lines in the conference, a line which presented a stubborn defense against Minnesota and Notre Dame.

Northwestern's line will be greatly outweighed by the Crimson forwards. The two Hoosier ends, Antonini and Lyons weigh 205 and 200, respectively, while the tackles, Anglemeyer and Renegar, each tip the scales at 210 pounds. The other members of the line are equally husky.

Indiana will be strengthened in the backfield by the return to the lineup of Wendell Walker, 195 pound sophomore fullback, Walker has not played since the first game of the season against Miami, having been injured in that game. The presence of Walker is expected to all considerable punch to the Hoosier attack.
