Wearing her own mother's lovely old-fashioned wedding gown of ivory satin, Miss Louise McCoy became the bride of Paul Richard Engberg of Springfield, son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin J. She carried a large bouquet of roses, lilies of the valley and sweet peas, with purple-centered orchids in the heart of the bouquet.

The gowns of the two bridesmaids, the bride's sisters, were also old-fashioned in style, made of slipper satin. Mrs. Robert S. Cook of Evanston was in gold color, and Mrs. Spencer W. Earnshaw of New York City was in deep peach. Both wore purple shoes and carried bouquets of roses, iris, bachelor buttons, and sweet peas, in shades of purple, blue, and gold. Robert Engberg of Chicago was his brother's best man.

In the living room of the Charles S. McCoy house in Winnetka, where the bride and bridegroom stood to exchange their wedding vows, two tall urns of calla lilies were placed. Bowls of lavender and white lilacs were on the mantel and in the hall. Dr. Samuel Harkness, pastor of the Winnetka Congregational church, officiated.
