New Miracle Machine Goes Joshua One Better

Not only Stops Sun—Stops
Whole Month of August

CHICAGO, Feb. 4.—When Edward Dexter, lawyer, sat down to dinner last night, pondering over his newest murder case, a rare sight greeted his puzzled eyes. Nestling cozily on his dinner plate was a handsome portion of what appeared to be unbelievably, summer-fresh lima beans!

Mr. Dexter stared. Then tasted. Yes, they were fresh all right. But what strange miracle could turn the season topsy-turvy and bring him, on this piercing January night, the tenderest, sweetest lima beans he ever forked to his lips—months out of season!

The answer, it turns out, is Birds Eye Quick-Freezing. A patented process that out-does Joshua by holding back the entire month of August—and enables you to get today lima beans even fresher than the kind you buy at the peak of the summer season!

Fresher? How? First, remember that few foods deteriorate so rapidly after picking as the lima. Once off the vine its flavor begins sneaking out like air from a pin-pricked balloon. Most limas, farmers will tell you, take from 12 to 72 hours to reach the market, and that's rushing them lickity-split. During that period, Time gets in his toughening licks, robs the flavor, dries the bean.

But the Birds Eye people have solved this problem. They pick the limas only when baby green—at the sweetest, tenderest stage of a lima's life. And the Quick-Freezing machine is located right in the fields.

Hardly are the limas shelled and washed when they're smacked into the machine—and the button pressed. At that split-second—whizz! their full flavor is suddenly sealed in by Arctic cold applied with the speed of light! At that instant the just-picked tenderness is caught in mid-air and miraculously held for you! In truth, for these Birds Eye Limas, Time stops!

Almost as amazing as the miracle itself is the modest price. Only 25c brings you a box all shelled and cleaned. Serves 4. Your nearest Birds Eye dealer has these delicious limas now, as well as four dozen other kinds of Birds Eye fruits, vegetables, seafoods, poultry, meats. You'll probably find his advertisement elsewhere in this paper.
