'CUDA CATCH

An exceptional catch of baracuda was reported by Paul T. Gilbert of Kenilworth on his return recently from Florida. Piloted by the veteran guide, Ed Hendrix, Mr. Gilbert and his companion, Dr. Oscar Linder of Coral Gables, were fishing in Biscayne Bay off Tahiti Beach when two baracudas struck at once.

With two of the big sea tigers on as many lines, Hendrix had his hands full for the next half hour. Both fish were landed successfully, and each weighed about 35 pounds. Two hours of fishing netted four 'cudas, averaging 25 pounds in weight. Previously Mr. Gilbert had been a member of a fishing party which, from the edge of the Gulf Stream, had brought in a 300-pound hammerhead shark.

White Bass Soon to Run in Wolf River

Oldtime fishermen in the region of Oshkosh, Wis., where every man, all the children, and most of the women are fishermen, are eagerly watching the thorn-apple trees. For when the thorn-apple blooms, oldtimers say, the white bass begin their run from Lake Winnebago up the Wolf river.

When the fish are running, anglers line the banks of the Wolf at all vantage points, and hundreds of boats dot the surface of the river. But though the fishermen may be numbered in thousands, the white bass, if they could be counted, would run into the millions.

So far as is known, the annual white bass run is peculiar to this region, although white bass are commonly caught in a number of other lakes throughout Wisconsin. The Wolf river run occurs when the millions of bass, which live all but a few weeks of the year in Lake Winnebago, start their spring migration up the lower reaches of the Wolf and on through a chain of lakes and rivers extending north and west of Oshkosh for a distance of fifteen miles.

On their way up stream, the fish swim close to the surface, bite freely on minnows, flies, or even on bare hooks. Several weeks later, when the fish return to Lake Winnebago, they move along the river bottom, and are rarely caught.

A. J. Elliotts Home From Nine Months' Trip Around World

Dr. A. J. Elliott, known to many north shore people as "Dad" Elliott, and Mrs. Elliott of 824 Ashland avenue, Wilmette, arrived home on Saturday from a nine months' trip around the world. They left Wilmette last June and crossed the Atlantic to Oslo, Norway, where they attended the World Sunday School conference held there in July.

Traveling north through Norway they crossed into Sweden and then went to Germany, and into Russia where they spent two or three weeks. Returning to Germany through Finland and Estonia they toured extensively up the Rhine, to Munich, Nuremberg, and Heidelberg, and then crossed Austria into Switzerland, remaining for a considerable time in Geneva.

Their next destination was Italy and here they saw Florence, Venice, Naples, and Rome, finally going to Marseilles, France, to sail from there for the Suez Canal, the Holy Land, and the Indian ocean. They stopped in Egypt, too, and then sailed for Singapore and the Island of Colombo. Altogether they were in India a month and a half and while at Mysore attended the Y. M. C. A. World conference.

Returning to Colombo they embarked for Hongkong, China, and from there took a boat to the Philippines, arriving during the sessions of the Eucharistic conference. From the Philippines they went back to China to tour Shanghai, Peking, and many other cities before going into Japan.

April 8 they sailed for home from Yokohama and at this point encountered the greatest adventure of the entire trip—a typhoon. They were in a storm for three days. The entire voyage was rough, and they landed in San Francisco one day late.

Wisconsin Guards Health of Summer Vacationers

Wisconsin is constantly on guard in behalf of the health of the state's vacation guests, through the agency of the state board of health. The board has its own vacation slogan, "Wisconsin, the healthful, the beautiful."

All resorts and hotels have this spring again had their water supply tested for purity in the health board's nine laboratories in various parts of the state.

Through the cooperation of the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture and Markets, summer visitors are also assured of a pure and wholesome supply of fresh milk.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred D. Breit recently completed a Mediterranean cruise, and a trip to Rome and Paris, followed by a return voyage on the Normandie. Since their return, a few weeks ago, they have moved from their former home at 422 Essex road, Kenilworth, into the S. H. Armstrong house at 1030 Ridge boulevard, Evanston, which they purchased. Mrs. Robert L. Tudor, 164 Oxford road, Kenilworth, moved last Thursday into the Breit house, 422 Essex road, which she in turn purchased.
