COURTESY

The automobile has brought benefits to everyone, but it has also impaired one of the gracious qualities of life—courtesy. When we get behind the wheel of a car we are sometimes guilty of rudeness that we would not dream of anywhere else.

If someone violates some minor driving rule, we glare at him balefully and indulge in sarcasm that would ordinarily exile us.

We seem to think we have rights beyond those of pedestrians. We often use the horn when the brain would serve better. The car can't think, but we can.
