Travel Into Bolivia Is Now Made Easier

A most intriguing country in South America which has been practically out of reach of travelers with limited time at their disposal but which is now easily accessible, is the sky-top republic of Bolivia.

This country resting high in the Andes has no sea coast and is approached through Mollendo, Peru, and Arica and Antofagasta, Chile. Ports visited weekly by Grace Line Santa ships from New York.

For many years after the Spanish conquest the mountains which are three and four miles high, prohibited anything but mule teams from making the trip down from Bolivia to the coast—the fabulous quantities of gold and silver taken from the rich mines of Bolivia were transported by pack train to the sea for trans-shipment to the royal coffers in Spain, and the journey was a long and arduous one requiring several weeks.

Later the railroads conquered the mountains and—tunneling through the reluctant peaks and swinging their steel tracks by bridge over the deep ravines—made it possible for the precious metals of the Andes to be transported with much more speed than formerly to the coast. Within the last two years the same snow-capped peaks were forced to submit to a new conquest—the conquest by air. Pan American Grace Airways opened up a new air route between Arica and La Paz, the capital, and modern transports now cover the route between Arica and La Paz in two and one-half hours. During the past year the route was extended to Oruro and Uyuni, Bolivia.

HOME FROM CRUISE

Mr. and Mrs. H. I. Boyle, 620 Exmoor road, Kenilworth, arrived home the middle of last week from a month's trip to Mexico and a cruise in southern waters. They went by train to Mexico, and then at Vera Cruz, the republic's principal seaport, took a boat to Havana, Cuba. From Havana they made a hundred-mile trip inland to Cardenas, and after leaving the island returned home by way of Florida.

Trail's End, Ontario, Offers Paradise for Huntsmen and Anglers

His Lordship, the Honorable Mr. Justice J. K. Mac Kay (Mac Kie), Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario and retinue, who have been guests at Trail's End, Emo, Ontario, for the hunting season, have returned to Toronto via Chicago, for the opening of the court of sessions in eastern Ontario.

Trail's End is one of the most beautiful and exclusive hunting and fishing lodges in the Lake of the Woods region, being located at the end of the road leading to the famous Clearwater Lake and the eastern wilderness lakes, some distance east of the Kenora-Fort Frances highway.

This property was purchased late in the summer by Charles D. Budd and Frank D. Miller of Glencoe, who will operate it in the future. It is 46 miles north and west of Fort Frances, Emo, Ontario, on the Canadian National railways, is the post office.

The hunting in Ontario has been the best in many seasons and one 54-inch spread bull moose head went out during the past week with many others. It is almost the record if not actually the largest spread shipped so far. Some of the deer have weighed three hundred pounds, dressed, and on last Saturday, at International Falls across the river from Fort Frances, there were seven railway trucks loaded with deer and moose being shipped to the United States. Partridge are increasing rapidly and it is a common experience to run over them on the wilderness roads.

There have been many large lake trout up to 45 pounds shipped also and those who have been fortunate enough to have enjoyed the Ontario autumn season, have had an experience they will long remember.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Dunn have just arrived at their home in Wilmette after a trip to Columbus, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Somerville, N. J., and New York City. They returned by way of Cincinnati.
