Jule Hartwick

Bev Brandenburg, Staff Reporter

"I decided to become a Librarian through my enjoyment of books," said Jule Hartwick recently. "I felt I could help students, staff and patrons of the Library develop a desire for knowledge through books."

Hartwick has been the ACC librarian since 1957 and has taught courses in library technician science for the past 23 years. This year he retires.

Hartwick is a native of Lansing. After military service from 1941-1945, he started his education, earning a B.A. at Michigan State and an M.A. at Western Michigan University.

Before becoming a librarian, he taught English at Oxford for one year. His first library post was in Garden City, followed by work at other Michigan schools.

During the 23 years Hartwick has been librarian, he has seen many changes. The library has grown from one tiny room which was shared by three libraries to the present spacious room on the second floor of the NRC building. The number of volumes has grown as well, from 2,900 in 1953 to more than 30,000 in 1980.

"I am sure my replacement will have his or her own ideas on the improvements or additions in the library," Hartwick commented. He added, "Upon my retirement..., I will miss daily contact with the students and their reference question needs."

After retirement, Hartwick and his wife Thelma, a retired ACC math teacher, will enjoy a trip to Norway. He will also spend more time "enjoying my hobbies: making jewelry, rock collecting, puttering with wood making, fishing, and traveling."

Urge caution to joggers

Although the real extent of the problem is unknown, some safety officials are becoming concerned about the increasing numbers of joggers, many of whom seem largely unaware of the risks and hazards present on and near roadways.

Joggers should be reminded that pedestrian accidents claimed the lives of 354 persons last year--a figure that represents about 17% of all traffic deaths in Michigan.

As a case in point, a recent article in the Detroit Free Press indicated that a 70 year-old Belle Isle jogger was killed when one car involved in a crash with another jumped the curb where the man was running. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Common sense should dictate that certain basic precautions be taken while jogging. For example, wearing light colored clothing or reflective arm or leg bands at night, or even carrying a small light where it can be seen easily by oncoming traffic. Police officials also say it is okay to leave your wallet at home, but recommend that some form of identification be carried in case something does happen. The best advice--be constantly alert to traffic--regardless of how safe you think you are.

Kim Schwiesow

Shari Ratz, Staff Reporter

"I don't mind driving forty-nine miles to school," says Kim Schwiesow, captain of the ACC women's softball team, "because if you really want something, you have to sacrifice a little bit. I think my long-range goals are worth the trouble."

Chosen by the softball coaches on the basis of her leadership ability and enthusiasm, Schwiesow's duty as captain includes representing the team before each game as she meets with umpires and coaches to learn the ground rules for each field. She reports these rules to the team, gives strategical opinions to the coaches, helps to boost team morale, and acts as mediator between team members and coaches. She also plays catcher for the team.

Schwiesow plans to minor in Athletic Training, a fairly new field in physical education. State laws may someday require an athletic trainer to be available at every school-related sporting event to provide preventative medicine and immediate aid in case of injuries. Her main goal, however, is to be an elementary school teacher.

"I think the quality of education depends on the teachers and how much extra time they're willing to put in," says Schwiesow, "Too many teachers are pushing kids through school without caring whether or not the students actually gain any knowledge or experience through the class. I'd like to work toward being available after class is over, not run out of the door when my eight hours are up. I want to be dedicated enough to give extra help to students who need it."

Schwiesow will commute to Saginaw Valley State College beginning this May to continue her elementary education program, hoping to complete her training in two years. She says, "I know that one teacher can't change the system, but if I can help even one student, I think I will have accomplished what I set out to do."

Schwiesow lives with her husband Frank and their two children, Cody 4 and Sky 3 on a farm in Millersburg, where they raise and sell registered quarter horses. As a full time student, she attends classes two days a week, leaving five days to spend at home with her family.

When anyone mentions spending more time with her kids, Schwiesow replies, "It's not the quantity of time you spend with your children, it's the quality of time you give them that matters." Schwiesow leaves her homework and school problems at school so that she can devote all of her attention to her family when she's with them. On the days that she spends in school the kids attend a day care center where they are well taken care of and can learn in a creative environment. She says her children are very proud that she's going to college and are always telling people that their mom is going to be a teacher.

Schwiesow enjoys all sports including basketball, volleyball, tennis, and all water sports. She also loves to attend rodeos where her husband, a professional cowboy, is a "bull-dogger" (steer-wrestler). In addition to all of her other activities, Schwiesow coaches the girls' J.V. basketball team at Onaway High School.

There are two things she's always wanted to do. One, is to travel to Las Vegas and the other is to run a humane society for animals. She hopes to save enough money to build one on the farm.

"I love my house and I love being a wife and mother," states Schwiesow, "but I have my goals in life. I don't want to be an "average" housewife."
