Fournier Offers Insight Into Community Colleges

I wonder where I'd be today if I had not had the opportunity to attend Flint College (now Mott Community College). After two years at Mott I spent 20 years in the United States Air Force; retiring in 1981 as a Major with a masters degree from Central Michigan University in Business Management. I often advise people on career choices. I usually advise a young person who is interested in a military career to get all the college they can before entering the service of their choice. The most important advantage to military service is the educational opportunities. It is more difficult today to get into the service, therefore to some the community college is the best alternative to a better future.

The greatest advantage of a community college is it's location. providing quality education to satisfy a wide range of Alpena Area needs is the mission of ACC.

More specifically, I believe my mission as head of the Data Processing Department is to promote computer literacy. I define literacy as the recognition of an application that can better be done on a computer. This implies a person knows as application ans how a computer can be used to assist someone working with that application. I tell my Introduction to Data Processing students the purpose of the course is confidence. Confidence begets interest, interest begets experience, experience begets knowledge and completing the cycle knowledge begets confidence. Whether one believes the purpose of the college is experience, knowledge or avocation courses- one should agree that confidence is the common product of al healthy human growth processes.

Equally as important, I see ACC as the primary instigator and facilitator for change in the Alpena area. With this comes the great responsibility for understanding of the needs and desires of the community. Sometimes these needs and desires have to be more simply defines and otherwise made clear so change is seen as good and healthy for the community's welfare and future growth.

I am proud to be a player in the game so important to our community and ultimately to our world's success.

On the lighter side....
