Trio-Programs: What are They?

The Trio Programs and Special Needs are programs which ACC students should be aware of.

The trio programs consist of Student Support Services, Upward Bound, and Talent Search.

Student Support Services, according to Bonnie Urlaub, wants to help students succeed in college. SSS helps qualified college students who have the ability to succeed but need additional help.

Qualified students are those whose family income meets federal government low-income guidelines, neither parent has graduated from a four-year college, or the student has a physical handicap or a certified learning disability.

Upward Bound is a program designed to help selected high school students complete high school and continue their education.

Qualifications for this program include those students in 9th, 10th, and 11th grades who are college-oriented and considered high risk. These are students who are in academic need, and are low achievers, those who are economically disadvantaged, or whose parents have not graduated from college.

U.B. provides assistance in schoolwork, personal counseling, helps to develop better study habits, familiarizes students with college selection, and assists in the completion of admission and financial aid applications.

The last of the Trio programs is the Talent

Search program. This program helps people who have academic potential but lack enough secondary education for further schooling.

Anyone 12 years of age or older who has completed the 6th grade and who meets low-income requirements, and/or whose parents have not graduated from college can qualify for Talent Search.

Talent Search helps a total of 800 students with career decisions, explores career possibilities, lets people visit college campuses and vocational schools around the state, and supplies financial aid information and assists in completing the forms.

Talent Search differs from the other two programs because it is an outreach program, meaning it is out in the community, not just the schools.

One final program is the Special Needs. Special Needs helps those ACC students who are in a vocational/technical program and are either disadvantaged or handicapped. The program offers basic skills improvement, social and community agency referrals, academic/personal guidance, and a study skills workshop.

All programs are federally funded through the U.S. Department of Education.
