By letters from Huddersfield, it appears that tranquillity has been restored at that place, and that those who were engaged in the late disturbances now perceive their error, and are daily flocking to the magistrates, abjuring their illegal oaths, and returning to their allegiance and duty.

In addition to a number of six frigates lately ordered to be built, twenty sloops of a large class have been laid down, to be completed as quick as possible; and an order has been issued to establish all the 38 and 40 gun frigates with an increase of men and an additional lieutenant, which is to be carried into effect immediately. A very rare and curious bird was shot lately near St. Asaph, Plintshire, which has been preserved, and is now in the possession of a gentleman of Liverpool. A difference has arisen amongst naturalists concerning its appellation. It appears of the Bittern or Heron species, and answers in several minutiae the description of the Spotted or African Bittern, Ardea Gardini, Botaurus Nevinus of Brisson, Ardea Nycticorax of Linnaeus, Le Biscoreau of Buffon, the Spotted Heron of Pennant, and Gardinean Heron of Latham. Under each of the foregoing denominations it is of equal rarity, and its emigration is extremely singular.

DEATHS.

1812. IN India, F. R. Lambert, mid-April 9. Shipman on board his Majesty's ship Cornelia, and second son of the late Sir H. Lambert, bart.

Sept. 17. At Fort Galeris, Carthage, aged 32, Matilda, wife of Capt. Moore, 67th regiment.

Sept. 21. At Rio Janeiro, Mr. James Stewart.

Nov. 9. In the Mediterranean, on board his Majesty's ship Milford, in consequence of a wound received that day whilst reconnoitring a strange vessel, in his 23d year, Mr. Othul Mawdesley, second lieutenant of that ship, a native of Chester, and second son of Rev. Tho. M. He was dutiful and affectionate to his parents, correct beyond example in the discharge of the duties of his profession, and upright and honourable in all his dealings. The virtuous and religious principles which had supported him through life, did not fail him at his death: he died, as an eyewitness observed, "a Hero and a Christian." It is difficult, in bearing testimony to departed worth, to avoid the appearance of partiality; yet one well acquainted with him, even from his birth, unwilling to allow merit uncommon as his to pass quite unnoticed, makes the above statement from a conviction of its truth. His remains were interred in the church-yard at Lissa, with all naval and military honours, attended by Admiral Freemantle, Capt. Markland, and his brother officers, all anxious to pay every mark of respect to the memory of one they so highly esteemed and loved.

Nov. ... Thrown from his horse, and pitching upon his head, fractured his skull in so dreadful a manner as to cause his death in an hour, Dr. Olyer Isles, of St. John's, Antigua.

Dec. 4. In St. Saviour's, Southwark, aged 77, Mr. John Coventry, a man well known and much respected in the parish, where he had resided more than 50 years. "He was not of an elevated rank of life, nor distinguished for his classical taste in literature; but was a man of an uncommon genius in the mechanical arts. About 40 years since he was introduced to the acquaintance of Dr. Benjamin Franklin and Mr. William Henley; both well known for their great skill in electricity. Mr. Coventry was frequently with them, and assisted them in their electrical experiments. He had in his earlier days turned his attention to this branch of Philosophy, particularly to medical electricity; and he had been useful in many cases of paralytic complaints, some of which came under the notice of the writer; though he does not recollect any instance of a complete cure, where the complaint was desperate, or of long continuance. About 50 years since, observing that all the hygrometers he had seen were extremely erroneous, he contrived one upon a new principle. This was a balance. On the extremity of one of the arms was suspended a string of very thin papers, about the size of a crown piece, with a bead put between each paper to keep them distinct; thereby permitting a free passage to the air. This curious instrument was extremely susceptible of every change in the atmosphere, which was shewn by an index at the extremity of the other arm of the balance, traversing a graduated scale of ivory; and was much approved. One of these hygrometers was presented to his present Majesty, by the late Mr. George Adams, of Fleet-street, London; and another to the Royal Society, by Sir John Pringle, the President. The principal advantage of this little instrument was, its so quickly imbibing the humidity of the atmosphere, and again, a readiness in its parting with it, herein excelling most of the other hygrometers then in use; but it was liable to be injured by dust, excepting it was covered with a glass case, and then it was greatly checked in its action. Mr. Coventry, when a young man, had been well acquainted with the microscope and its use; and had made some useful discoveries in the minute part of the creation. Some of the glasses of his microscope, and of the deepest magnifying powers, were ground and polished by himself. After many trials, he discovered a method of cutting very thin slices of the different sorts of wood, in order to exhibit under the microscope the wonderful structure of the air vessels; and the minute capillary tubes for the circulation of the sap: and these, when well executed, are most delightful objects for the microscope. About the year 1774, Mr. Coventry presented to the Royal Society several specimens of micrometers, drawn on ivory and glass. Mr. Baker, in his Microscopical Essays, had noticed some which he had by him, and which were formed of parallel lines, drawn by a fine diamond, one fifth part of an inch asunder; but Mr. Coventry soon improved this art, by drawing one hundred lines in the space of an inch; and, after long and repeated experiments, he arrived at so great perfection in this art, as to draw parallel lines on glass, the two-hundredth part of an inch asunder. These lines he has likewise contrived to cross with the like parallel lines at right angles; thereby forming minute squares, which are only the millionth of an inch superficial. The writer believes no one ever attempted this but himself. These micrometers are used with the microscope; and by them we may readily discover the magnitude of minute animalculæ, the size of the globules of blood, and the dimensions of the various parts of insects, &c. The active genius of this valuable man was always engaged in contriving and making some use of improvement in the Arts; and, though he was not much skilled in instrumental music, yet he has made, in the course of several years, two chamber organs of several stops. He made, likewise, a 12 feet refracting telescope, for viewing the transit of the planet Venus across the sun's disk, in the year 1769; and in company with him, the writer had that most pleasing prospect, which no mortal will again behold until the year 1874. The last exercise of his inventive genius was in the construction of several curious statical balances for the assaying of gold, which, for their neat workmanship and ready adjustment in practice, were, perhaps, never yet equalled; and, in all probability, will hardly ever be excelled. I think I have heard him assert, that when these balances are properly adjusted, and inclosed in a glass case, to avoid dust, and to prevent every motion of the external air, they would weigh to the extreme accuracy of one thousandth part of a grain. Most of these balances have lately been shipped for the different English settlements in the East Indies, by the order of the Honourable East India Company. Mr. Coventry had two wives; the first died in child-birth, in the year 1780; and the last in 1809, of a cancer. By the former he has left three sons and two daughters; by the last, two daughters only. This truly valuable man was of an agreeable disposition, and remarkable for his benevolent and patient temper of mind; strictly just in all his dealings with mankind; and has been, for many years, an example of piety to his children, and to all around him. For more than 50 years he was painter to his Majesty's Mint-office in the Tower of London; and his last work for Government was painting the new office for coining silver tokens, on Tower-hill. He was born in the year 1735, in the parish of Christchurch, adjoining the parish of St. Saviour's, in which he died, on the 4th of December, 1812." [W. BICKNELL, Footing.]

On coming into the house he found his cousin, a youth of about 14, with a gun in his hand, playing with a younger brother of the deceased; and, on the deceased exclaiming, "What are you boys doing with the gun? Put it away, or there will be mischief;" he had scarcely uttered the latter sentence before it went off, and the whole contents of the charge of shot, wadding, &c. were lodged in the upper part of the front of his thigh. More than two hours elapsed before surgical assistance could be obtained, and the bleeding was so profuse, that in all probability he would not have survived their arrival, but for the assistance of a neighbour, who applied a tourniquet to the main artery; but, in spite of every assistance, and the most unremitting attention of two surgeons, a mortification ensued, and he expired on the following evening.

In the ardour of his zeal for the success of the contest in which Great Britain was engaged, he nobly disregarded the deranged state of his health; and the fatigues which he underwent in the campaign of the division of the army under Lieut.-gen. Francis M. of the 87th foot. He had been engaged in the active service of his country for more than 20 years, particularly in the West Indies. In the early part of 1807 he embarked with his regiment for Bengal, where he continued till Lord Minto, the Governor-general of India, planned the expedition to Java, in which he had the command of his battalion. In storming the lines of the entrenched camp of Cornelis, near Batavia, this gallant officer received a musket-ball in his left breast, which passed out at the shoulder. He was slowly recovering from the effects of this severe wound at the time the battalion embarked on its return to Bengal; but, owing to the inroads made upon his constitution by the unhealthy climate of Java, he, after a short residence at Calcutta, obtained permission from the Governor-general to return to England for the benefit of his health. He accordingly embarked at Calcutta, in a running ship; but finding himself extremely ill on his arrival at the Cape, and sensible of the approach of death, he requested to be put on shore, where he lingered for nine days, and departed this life on the 11th of July last. In him his Sovereign and his Country have to lament the loss of a brave, meritorious, and gallant officer, and his immediate and numerous friends a man whose many virtues were only equalled by the amiable generosity of his natural disposition.

At her house in Birmingham, Anne, relict of William Scott, esq. Her memory cannot be so much honoured by a delineation of her character, as by the grief which is felt through a large town and neighbourhood on her decease, and by the esteem with which she will ever be spoken of among those who had the happiness of knowing her intimately. It is fit, however, for the admonition and instruction of the living, that her virtues be not unrecorded. She was the only child of the Rev. John Toncks, of Harborne; and the precepts which she received, and the events which she experienced in early life, formed her to a temper remarkably meek, affectionate, beneficent, and pious. Uniformly kind and generous, her disposition to do good increased with her means of gratifying this darling inclination. Here her memory shines in the fairest light. We too often observe that the heart contracts with age, and that the love of wealth is proportioned to a man's added stores. But the case of the subject of this memoir was exactly the reverse. The greater the abundance bestowed on her by a liberal Providence, the more freely did she give to others. Every augmentation of her paternal fortune she employed as an instrument of advancing the happiness of mankind. Her language was, "I am a steward for my Heavenly Master;" and, as she approached the close of a life extended to nearly 83 years, she repeatedly said, "Let it be my care, while I continue here, to do all the service in my power to my fellow-creatures." Her bounty flowed perpetually in almost every conceivable channel. Pure and refreshing, it gladdened the eyes of beholders as well as the feelings of the subjects of it: more frequently, unseen by men, it visited the dry and thirsty land where before there was no water, and, by its influence, caused the orphan's and the widow's heart to sing for joy. Whenever religion, humanity, friendship, solicited her aid, whenever youth needed instruction, or age repose, her assistance was readily imparted. In very many instances indeed, and as often as was practicable, the solicitation was delicately anticipated; and her public donations, though numerous and large, were fewer and less considerable than her private charities. Many young and deserving persons were supplied by her, on their entrance into trade, with sums of money at a moderate interest; and she was accustomed to speak with particular gratitude and pleasure, of the success which commonly followed this application of her wealth. Far from being confined to these acts, her benevolence was the habit of Christian love. It eminently answered to the fine picture of charity, drawn by an Apostle's pen. Although it may be declared of her, "she was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did," her temper must not be forgotten. Many weep over her grave besides those who, with sighs and tears, there shew "the garments which she made while she was with them:" there are many who can attest her courtesy and hospitality, the engaging affection of her disposition, and the humility and blamelessness of her deportment in all the intercourses of society. Wealth and station could not corrupt her heart: for her "the desire of the eyes and the pride of life" had no attractions. That she might more effectually relieve the sufferings and promote the comfort of her brethren, she was content to forego the usual appendages of opulence and elevated circumstances. To do good, was her daily business, her meat and drink. Nor were her bounties limited by considerations of sect and party; they were perfectly catholic. First to her own principles, she knew how to respect others in the conscientious exercise of theirs. She was regular and faithful in the performance of every religious and social duty; and, with as few shades as the weakness of human nature may be supposed to admit, illustrated the excellence of the Christian character. Arrived at "a period which renders every life venerable," she was still calm and placid; amidst the infirmities of age, still desirous of saving trouble to those around her. A course of more than common usefulness and honour, was finished in peace, and without any pain. She died ripe for a state where piety and benevolence shall find their amplest and an everlasting gratification; and to persons who are blessed with those opportunities of doing good which superior wealth bestows, she has left a pattern by which it is their duty, and will be their true wisdom, interest, and praise, to frame their views and conduct. Her remains were interred, Jan. 18, with deserved honours and real grief, at Great Barr, in Staffordshire; the Red House in which village had long been her country residence, and that of the family of Aldin, whose large property she inherited, and from whom, on her mother's side, she was lineally descended.

Jan. 19. Of asthma and dropsy, Mr. James Stretch, of Queen's-head-lane, Islington. He was born Oct. 26, 1744. His father died Jan. 13, 1755; his mother survived her husband but four days. Their son James was apprenticed to a Spectacle-maker, became afterwards partner with his master, and succeeded him in business, which was carried on in Cockcourt, St. Martin's-le-Grand. Though Mr. Stretch was endowed with a good natural capacity, he never studied Optics as a science; yet he manufactured good spectacles, had a "good trade," and was "well-paid" by Mr. Dollond and others; in fine, "by industry and perseverance," he acquired an independent fortune. In the Spring of 1805, Mr. Stretch found himself affected with vehement cough and other symptoms of a threatening pulmonary complaint. Queen's-head-lane being near a capital cow-layer, he took lodgings there, and in the course of the Summer received so much benefit from the salubrity of the air, as induced him to take a lease of the first good house he could procure in the lane, when he entirely gave up his business to Mr. Pheps. In the Autumn of 1810, Mr. Stretch became alarmingly ill with asthma, and put himself under the care of Dr. Bree; the following Spring, the prescriptions of his neighbour Dr. Brown afforded him for some time very considerable relief. It had been evident during many months past, that the deceased laboured under an incurable derangement of the hepatic system: latterly he had no cough; but laborious respiration, anasarcaous swellings, &c. put a period to an illness that was sustained by him with fortitude, and soothed with every possible attention by his amiable wife and family, consisting of a son and two daughters.

Jan. 20. In Montague-place, Russell-square, a few days after giving birth to her seventh child, the Hon. Augusta, wife of Mr. Serjeant Vaughan, second daughter of Henry Beauchamp, late Lord St. John of Bletsoe.

At Boddicott, Oxfordshire, aged 80, the Rev. Richard Nicoll, D. D. rector of Drayton in that county, chancellor of Wells, and late chaplain in ordinary to his Majesty. This honour he resigned in 1804. Dr. Nicoll was a Divine of the old school, a man of strong parts and an extensive capacity. In literature his attainments were eminent; embracing, in particular, every topick of history, sacred and profane, ecclesiastical and secular, connected with the wide range of his profession; whilst a most retentive memory and a prompt elocution enabled him to pour forth in exuberance the collected stores of his rich and various knowledge on every subject that presented itself. Hence, although he appeared to great advantage in the pulpit, where the dignity of his figure and the solemnity of his manner—where the excellence of his discourse, and his masculine and energetic delivery, attracted high admiration; yet in the opinion of those who best knew him, his talents seemed peculiarly formed for conversation. In that familiar and constantly-recurring exercise of the mental faculties, he shone, indeed, with uncommon brillianee. In an apprehension quick as lightning, in the vivacity of his wit, and the profusion of his anecdote, he had in the judgment of a large circle of acquaintance few equals, and scarcely a superior. But this was the least part of his praise: his fame rested on a much firmer and surer basis than the brightest acquisitions, or the most splendid abilities. He was an undissembled Christian, animated with all the genuine benevolence of that noble character. Humane, compassionate, charitable,—he delighted in doing good and diffusing happiness; he felt for indigence, sympathized with sorrow, and relieved misery to the utmost limits of his power. In domestic life his character was no less estimable. He was a steady friend, a kind master, the most indulgent of parents; and to her who had been the partner of his cares and his felicity during a period of forty-five years, he was so affectionately devoted, that he regarded her separation from him with a kind of instinctive and unconquerable horror, which sometimes transported him beyond the bounds of moderation: a venial fault, if any could be such, and too manifest an indication that her removal from this life would be the probable harbinger of his own. Nor were these apprehensions without foundation. For though he lingered on from the 5th of November (the time of her death) to the 20th of January; yet through the whole of that interval the lamp of life was evidently wasting with extreme rapidity; and on the morning of that day he happily obtained, by an easy and gentle expiration, his release from the troubles of mortality.

Feminis lugere honestum est: viris meminisse. Tac.

Dr. Nicoll was born at Clifton Reyns, near Olney, Bucks, the son of the Rev. Rich. Nicoll, rector of that parish, and nephew to the Rev. John Nicoll, D. D. head-master of the school, as well as benefendary of Westminster, and canon of Christchurch, Oxford, who died Sept. 21, 1765, and bequeathed the bulk of his fortune to the subject of this article. He was formerly fellow of Lincoln college, and became M. A. Jan. 27, 1757; B. D. July 4, 1764; D. D. May 24, 1775. He published two sermons, 1. Preached before the University of Oxford, on Act Sunday, July 9, 1775, 8vo. 2. At St. Paul's, before the Stewards of the Sons of the Clergy, &c. May 10, 1792, 4to. He is supposed to have left many valuable Sermons in manuscript, from which a selection will probably probably in due time be given to the Publick.

Jan. 21. At Newfield, near Newcastle-under-Lyne, of gout in the stomach, aged 83, Smith Child, esq. Admiral of the Blue. He was brought into the service in 1747, under Earl Gower's auspices, by the circumnavigator Lord Anson, of whom he was the nautical disciple; and served at the sieges of Louisbourg and Pondicherry. He commanded the Europe at the repulse of the French fleet off the Chesapeake, in 1781, being second in the line of battle there; and obtained the thanks of the commander-in-chief, and the promotion of many of that ship's officers for her conduct in the action. In 1795 he commanded the Commerce de Marseilles, of 180 guns; and attained his Flag on the 14th Feb. 1799. The Admiral was, during great part of his life, in the Commission of the Peace for Staffordshire, a Deputy Lieutenant, &c. of that county; and was most justly and extensively beloved and revered.

In New-st.-sq. Fetter-lane, aged 72, Mr. Henry Woodford, upwards of 40 years an inhabitant of St. Bride's parish, and one of the oldest Members of the Antient and Honourable Lumber Troop, in which he held an office 40 years, and, in the performance of its duties, introduced to the Society many Members of the Corporation of the City of London, among the last of whom were the late Lord Mayor (now Sir Claudius Stephen Hunter, bart.), Mr. Ald. Akins, M. P. &c. &c. His attachment to the Society was remarkable, being seldom absent from its stated meetings. He possessed many years a crooked guinea, which he desired should be spent, on the day of his interment, in punch and tobacco. It was also his wish that his remains should be carried into the Troop room; and thence, accompanied by his Brother Troopers, borne to the grave, and their guns fired over it. In consequence of his request, a great number mustered, to pay the last tribute of respect to their departed friend. The body was preceded by the Officers (except six, who supported the pall) and Comrades to St. Bride's, in a very solemn and respectful manner, the Troop-guns firing minutely till it arrived at the church; and, after the service, seven pieces were fired over the grave. The guinea was afterwards spent in the manner desired; and the Lieutenant-colonel, in a very neat speech, returned his thanks to those gentlemen who had formed the procession, for their respectful and becoming conduct.

In his 50th year, after a long illness, which to his friends (and he had many) always seemed to threaten his dissolution, Mr. William Eyre, of Coventry. His understanding, before it was impaired by loss of health, distinguished him pre-eminently from the herd, and his heart, to its last melancholy beat, was that of a man, a gentleman, and a Christian; for though as the latter he might be somewhat deficient in "the outward and visible sign," in "the inward and spiritual grace" he was scarcely to be exceeded. The angelic annunciation of the Nativity of Christ, "Peace on earth, good-will towards men," could to no human ear be more welcome than to his. He had long "thought nothing great, the contempt of which is great," and his generous detestation of meanness, injustice, and tyranny, in all their forms, gave a colour to his whole life, which endeared him to all with whom the writer of this imperfect though affectionate tribute to his memory would covet to be numbered.

Jan. 27. At Hinckley, aged 73, Thomas Baldwin. He was well known by the appellation of "The Old Doctor," on account of his skill in that virulent pest of humanity, the small-pox; many thousands having been inoculated by him, in the course of the last thirty years, with unexampled success; till, on the introduction of the Jennerian system, which is a great measure superseding his former practice, his intelligent mind, after duly investigating the subject, led him to adopt the Vaccine mode, in which he shone equally conspicuous. Few men can boast of that equanimity of temper which he possessed; no change of circumstances or situation ever appeared to elate or to distress him. His mind was comprehensive, his memory retentive, and, by his coolness and deliberation in argument, but few excelled him. He was a great politician, having been a reader of diurnal prints for upwards of half a century. The principles which he uniformly avowed and supported, were of the old Whig school; he used frequently to observe, "that our excellent Constitution, in its pristine purity, was one of the greatest efforts of human ingenuity." He also distinguished himself on several other occasions; and in 1776 published a poem on the rise, progress, and present state, of the ingenious art of frame-work-knitting, as mentioned in the last volume of Mr. Nichols's History of Leicestershire.

At Wanlip, after a long and afflicting illness, aged 59, Rev. John Anderson, rector of that parish, vicar of St. Nicholas, Leicester, and chaplain to the County gaol. He was distinguished by his good-nature, and unassuming and unassuming manners, which endeared him to those to whom his modest merit was known. He was a sound and orthodox minister of the Church of England, both with respect to its discipline and doctrine, and distinguished himself, throughout life, by his Christian benevolence and amiable attention to the charities of domestic life.

At Clifton, the Hon. Caroline Powys, fourth daughter of the late Right-hon. lord Lifted, of Lilford, co. Northampton.

Feb. 5. In Grosvenor-square, after a short illness, Edward Hartopp, esq. of Dalby-house, co. Leicester. To enumerate his virtues would be superfluous: his excellencies were of that unobtrusive kind which attract not the admiration of strangers, but which will remain indelibly engraved on the hearts of all who knew him. In performing the duties of husband, father, and friend, few equalled, and none surpassed him. Actively benevolent, he was the friend of man; and, if a life of undeviating rectitude may claim so glorious an appellation, "the friend, too, of his God."

Feb. 8. At Shaftesbury, aged 64, Mr. James Lush, one of the aldermen, and formerly a mercer in that town, after sustaining, with becoming resignation and fortitude, nearly 20 years unremitting affliction and pain from rheumatic gout. He was much esteemed and respected.

Feb. 10. In Bishopsgate-street, aged 26 years, William Kynnier, esq. late purser in the honourable the East India Company's service on board of "The Baring," Capt. Jas. Carnegie, commander, bound to and from Madras and Bengal, in the years 1811-2. Few readers of sensibility will withhold a generous sigh, as they notice the death of an amiable man, thus prematurely laid low. The hand of affection that pens this short tribute, is held up to draw closer rather than to tear aside the pall overshadowing the remains of the departed. It is not fitting, it is not desired, that the public gaze should behold with apathy and idle wonderment all that could here with fidelity be stated. Suffice it to observe, that the gentleman whose loss is here recorded, was the eldest representative of a very reputable family. At his father's decease, Mr. K. (with his brother and sisters) was taken under the protection of an uncle of the same name, a West-Indian, resident in the parish of Chislehurst. At that excellent man's death, on the 5th January 1808 (for our account, see Gent. Mag. for Jan. 1808, p. 90), a will was found, the only one that has yet appeared, in which a very handsome legacy was left, unaltered, to the father of the subject of this article, to his heirs, his executors, and his assigns for ever. The bequest, in strict interpretation of law, was declared lapsed; and this branch of the family merely shared in the property, in common with more fortunate relatives! The spirit of honourable enterprize blazed still; although water, instead of oil, was thus thrown upon it, by the permission of Heaven. Instead of domestic arrangements, foreign speculations were now anxiously adopted. To make himself honestly and honourably independent, to prove himself not unworthy of his race, to set a meritorious example to his only brother, and to provide, as far as possible, for the comfort and happiness of several worthy sisters, Mr. K. consented to embrace a mode of life in every point of view isksome and ungenial with his previously-acquired habits: "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick!" The truth of this remark was here fatally exemplified, after a voyage of no successful result; and the sudden death of a highly-valued friend on Sunday, August 30, 1812, Robert Boog, esq. (see our Obituary for September, p. 299), blasted the blossoms of industry, and chilled it to the very roots. A rapid decay of corporeal powers was the natural consequence of broken spirits and disappointed wishes. Never, perhaps, did a milder or a more inoffensive temper adorn a manlier frame. To the last the sufferer bore his pains without a murmur, and he died, as he had lived, universally beloved by all who knew him.

Feb. 11. At Stowe, Bucks, the Rt.-hon. Geo.-Grenville Nugent Temple, Marquis of Buckingham, Earl Temple, Viscount and Baron Cobham, in Great Britain, and Earl Nugent in Ireland, knight of the Garter, Garter, lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Bucks, high steward of Buckingham and of Westminster, and one of the tellers of the Exchequer, &c. His Lordship was born June 17, 1753; succeeded, on the demise of his uncle Richard Earl Temple, in 1779, to the title of Earl Temple, and was created Marquis of Buckingham in 1784. His lordship twice filled the distinguished situation of Lord-lieutenant of Ireland. He married, April 16th, 1775, Mary, eldest daughter and heiress to Robert Earl Nugent of Ireland (to whose earldom he succeeded on the death of that Nobleman in 1789, in consequence of a limitation of the patent). By this lady (who was created an Irish Peeress in 1800, by the title of Baroness Nugent, with remainder to her second son Lord George) his Lordship has issue Richard Earl Temple, born March 16th, 1776, now Marquis of Buckingham, and Lord George Grenville Nugent Temple, by the demise of his mother, Baroness Nugent, now Baron Nugent of Carlanstown, born Dec. 30th, 1788; and Lady Mary, born July 3, 1787.

Feb. 21. At Richmond, Surrey, in his 79th year, Henry Baldwin, esq. formerly an eminent Printer, first in White Friars, then in Fleet-street, and finally in New Bridge-street, in a house built purposely for him; but he had for several years wholly relinquished business, whilst in the full enjoyment of his health and mental faculties, to his eldest surviving son; and wisely retired, to enjoy, in the bosom of his family, the merited rewards of honourable industry. He was (except one) the oldest member of the Company of Stationers, of which he had been a Liveryman 57 years, and was Master in 1792. About three years ago he lost two brothers, one older, the other younger than himself, and an only sister, all at a good old age; but their loss had a very visible effect on his usually cheerful spirits; (see LXXIX. 887. 893.; LXXX. 394.)—As a Printer, he was of the old school; bred under Mr. Justice Ackers of Clerkenwell, the original Printer of the "London Magazine;" and he commenced business for himself under the most promising auspices. Connected with a phalanx of the first-rate wits, Bennet Thornton, Garrick, Colman, Steevens, &c. &c. he set up, with the success it so well deserved, a literary Newspaper, "The St. James's Chronicle," on the foundation of a very old paper of nearly the same title; and had the satisfaction of conducting it to a height of eminence unknown to any preceding Journal, nor exceeded by any of its successors—with whom sheer Wit and Literature are no longer the prominent features. From early association with men of eminence both in the literary and fashionable world, Mr. Baldwin had acquired elegant habits; and, without any profound stock of Literature, had sufficiently cultivated a mind naturally strong, to render his company and his conversation in the highest degree acceptable. But the firm rectitude of his mind, the real tenderness of his heart, and the sincerity of his attachments, were best known in his domestic circle, and by his choice friends, who regret in him the loss of one, who in a rare and peculiar manner united the sometimes opposed virtues of justice and generosity. If he had a failing (and who is without?) it was a sort of affectation of being occasionally cynical and morose; qualities totally different from his natural disposition, which in reality overflowed with the milk of human kindness; nothing being so truly gratifying to him as the conferring of a favour without appearing to do it, and this more particularly in transactions of a pecuniary nature. There are still living a few of his old and intimate friends, who, like the writer of this article, having passed many a happy day with him for more than half a century, can testify the truth of a character dictated by sincere regard, and written warm from the heart, at the moment of hearing of his death.—Two sons and three daughters survive, to comfort a worthy and afflicted mother.

Feb. 23. Aged 5 months, John, the infant son of Mr. Charles Lush, of Charles's-sq. Hoxton.

Mrs. Howard, wife of Mr. James Howard, farmer at Westfield in the parish of St. Michael near St. Alban's, and one of the six daughters of the Rev. Mr. Ekis, formerly rector of Pebmash, Essex. She was sitting after dinner, when a blood-vessel suddenly burst (as it had done several times before), and by the excessive hæmorrhage that followed she was suffocated in a few minutes.
