After three decades in the legal profession, Wolf Tausendfreund says he is completely at ease inside a courtroom.

But starting next month, he'll find himself on the other side of the bench.

The 61-year-old partner in the law firm of O'Flynn Weese and Tausendfreund has been appointed judge of the Superior Court of Justice and has been assigned to London, Ont.

He will be sworn in at a ceremony Oct. 24 in London.

"I'm delighted with my appointment but it's also bittersweet," Tausendfreund told The Intelligencer Tuesday.

"O'Flynn Weese Tausendfreund is my professional family. We've been together since 1984 and moving on is an emotionally difficult decision. But, on the other hand, I look forward to a new challenging career."

been practising law in Belleville since 1972. His career has revolved around litigation, dealing with family matters, commercial, personal injury, insurance defence, real estate and estates. In 2002, the Law Society of Upper Canada recognized Tausendfreund as a certified specialist in civil litigation.

He also has criminal experience, including four murder trials, and serving as a federal Crown Attorney for 10 years.
