

Tices Claude

Happy Birthday Claude, Says George Carver on Claudes 75th Birthday

The Intelligencer, April 26, 1968

Belleville journalist dies at 89

The Intelligencer
July 17, 1980

Long-time city journalist Claude Tice, 89, died Wednesday night.

During his lengthy service at The Intelligencer he became one of the most-widely known community personalities.

His interest in the city and citizens on whom his career was based sent him into city hall, where he served as alderman for a full decade in the 1950s.

Born in Rawdon Township, he served overseas on active duty during World War 1, and some time after his return began his city newspaper career.

As a reporter, he covered all aspects of community life.

Early in his career he became closely identified with city sports—particularly hockey and baseball.

In 1932 he was named city editor of The Intelligencer, a post which he energetically filled until he stepped down in 1968 to assume a less demanding job in the newsroom.

Some time later he retired completely from the paper.

He took up residence in Hastings Manor county home for the aged in 1972.