Tice, Mrs Wm.

This was exactly what Mrs. Tice had in mind when she began knitting last summer in her spare time. She will tell you she has been knitting ever since she was about eight, and that the whole thing is so automatic that it's just like breathing.

"But then I like everything in the line of needlework," she adds hastily.

Mrs. Tice is modest about her contribution to the Exchange.

"Knitting is something I do in my spare moments. I feel it is worthwhile to do things like that, particularly when you have the time." she said.

Speaking about the Exchange Mrs. Tice terms the project as "worthwhile".

"I think the Exchange is doing a tremendous job. I have always been impressed with the unity that is much a part of the organization, particularly the elimination of overlapping of various groups," she added.

Christmas — as far as 81year-old Mrs. William Tice is concerned — is a time when giving is one of the most important things to do. And give she did — her time, energy and her ends of wool.

"With these "ends of wool" as she calls them, Mrs. Tice knitted mitts, socks, baby sets and toque and mitt sets — to be given as gifts to some of the more than 1,100 underprivileged children in the city as part of the Christmas Exchange. fidential clearing house, matching the needs of families with the right donors, offering assistance in the form of vouchers, hampers and cheques, where possible. Donations may be mailed to Box 815, Belleville or 224 John St., at the offices of the United Community Services
