A Belleville woman has been awarded one of only 10 federal Parliamentary internships for 1984-85.

Kathryn McDade, daughter of Rosemarie McDade, will spend the next year assisting a member of Parliament in his constituency and House of Commons duties.

She will also travel to Quebec, Alberta, Washington, England and West Germany to study parliamentary procedures.

McDade, who attended Centennial Secondary School in Belleville and graduated from Oak Bay Secondary School in Victoria, B.C., received her BA (honors) in political science from Carleton University this year.

At graduation, she won one of two University Senate medals for outstanding achievement.

She is enrolled in the master's program in public administration at Carleton.

McDade holds an Ontario Graduate Scholarship, the Xerox Canada Incorporated Graduate Scholarship and the Epstein Scholarship in graduate studies.

She is research assistant to Dr. Allan M. Maslove, director of the School of Public Administration at Carleton.

The Parliamentary internship program was started in 1969. It is designed to provide Parliamentary backbenchers with highly qualified assistants, to give a select group of exceptionally qualified graduates a chance to supplement their knowledge of Canada's Parliament with practical experience and ultimately to become important national resources themselves.

Participants of the program have found successful careers in fields such as journalism, education, public service and business.

The program was initiated by the Canadian Political Science Association, and acceptance for internship is based on a competition.
