One of those intelligent Americans who are good enough to inspect our little island is said to have remarked that it was very pretty after dark for four of falling. And truly we are very small indeed. Our rivers, in comparison with the grand floods of the West, are nothing better than ditches; our meadows with their trim hedges, and our parcs with their palings, most appear almost ridiculous to any one who has seen the rolling and limitless prairies of the West.
Bulk and beauty, however, have no necessary connection; and Americans of the best sort, men like Washington Irving and Nathaniel Hawthorne, have recognized a peculiar charm in our modest scenery. The "Father of Waters," they say, is but a turbid current after all, and the prairie is not less monotonous than magnificent. What in vain charms our friends, however, is that which we ourselves ought to value very dearly, and guard very carefully, the traditional and historical element in our scenery.
They behold in England what from the very nature of the case they cannot witness in this country; and they give him a new sensation—one of the best in the world, if his senses be wide and his nature generous. He is placed, so to speak, in rapport with his ancestors, when he sees the fortifications and cathedrals of the "old home"; he feels for the first time the full meaning of feudalism, and learns to comprehend how slow and gradual has been the nation's growth. No one can understand England from mere books alone, nor from a hurried visit to her great cities; the student must go through a course of instruction under those mute professors, Canterbury, Winchester, and York, Haddon, Hatfield, and Durham. Nor may he confine himself to famous places like these; he must see and feel that every half hidden by the woods, with its fantastic windows mirrored in the moat; the little church among the fields, solitary until the Sunday morning, when, along every footpath, over rustic bridge and stile, the country folk come trooping to prayers.

IN CHANCERY.
IN CHAMBERS.
V. C. SPRAGGE.
Monday the Twenty-ninth day of May,
In the twenty-eighth year of the reign of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and in the year of our Lord, 1865.

CHARLES BERTRAM ORDE, Plaintiff, AND JOHN OWENS the younger, Defendant.

UPON the application of the plaintiff, and on bearing read the affidavits of Thomas Broughall, Hannah Callaghan, James Gallon, John Clarke, and the said plaintiff; and it appearing by the said affidavits and depositions, that after due diligence, the said defendant, John Owens the younger, cannot be found to be served with a copy of the bill in this case; and it is ordered, that the said defendant, John Owens the younger, do, on or before the thirtieth day of September next, Answer or demur to the said bill. And it is ordered that a copy of this order, together with the notice required by the General Orders of this Court, be published in The Daily Globe once a week, and in The Canadian Post, published in the Town of Lindsay, in the County of Victoria, for the eight weeks next preceding the said thirtieth day of September next. And it is further ordered, that a copy of this order, and an office copy of the said bill, be served on John Owens the elder, the father of the said defendant.
Entered,
A. GRANT,
Registrar.

JOHN OWENS THE YOUNGER, TAKE NOTICE, that if you do not answer or demur to the Bill, pursuant to the above order, the Plaintiff may obtain an order to take the Bill as confessed against you, and the Court may grant the Plaintiff such relief as he may be entitled to on his own showing, and you will not receive any further notice of the future proceedings in this cause.
Dated this 15th day of June, A.D. 1865.

LITERARY SELECTIONS.
SEPTEMBER.
Sweet is the voice that calls From babbling waterfalls In meadows where the dewy seeds are flying:
And the fresh breeze blows And eddying comes and goes In faded gardens where the rose is dying.

Among the stubbled corn, The blithe quail pipes at morn;
The merry partridge drums its hidden places,
And glittering insects gleam Above the ready team, Where busy spiders spin their flimsy lanes.

At ere cool shadows fall Across the garden wall,
And on the clustered geraniums to purple turn;
And purple vapours lie Along the Eastern sky
Where the broad harvest moon is really burning.

Ah, soon on field and hill,
The wind shall whistle chill, And patriarch swallows call their flocks together,
To fly from frost and snow,
And seek for lands where blow The fairer blossoms of a balmy weather.

The pollen-dusted bees Search for the honey lees That linger in the last flowers of September; While plaintive mourning doves Coo sadly to their loves Of the dead summer they so well remember.

The cricket chirps all day,
"O, fairest summer, stay!"
The squirrel eyes askance the chestnuts browning;
The wild fowl fly afar
After the golden bar,
And hasten southward ere the skies are frowning.

Now comes the fragrant breeze Through the dark cedars, And round about my temples fondly lingers, In gentle playfulness Like to the soft caress Bestowed in happier days of loving fingers.

Yet though a sense of grief Comes with the falling leaf, And memory makes the summer doubly pleasant
In all my autumn dreams A future summer gleams Passing the fairest glories of the present!

thaniel Hawthorne, have recognized a peculiar charm in our modest scenery. The
"Father of Waters," they say, is but a tur-
bid current after all, and the prairie is not
in vain charms our friends, however, is that
dearly, and guard very carefully, the traditional and historical element in our scenery.
They behold in England what from the very
nature of the case they cannot witness in
this country; and they give him a new sensation—one of the best in the world, if his
is placed, so to speak, in rapport with his
ancestors, when he sees the fortifications and
cathedrals of the "old home"; he feels for
the first time the full meaning of feudalism,
and learns to comprehend how slow and
gradual has been the nation's growth. No
one can understand England from mere
great cities; the student must go through a
course of instruction under those mute professors, Canterbury, Winchester, and York, Haddon, Hatfield, and Durham. Nor may
he confine himself to famous places like
these; he must see and feel that every
half hidden by the woods, with its fantastic
church among the fields, solitary until the Sunday morning, when, along every foot-
path, over rustic bridge and stile, the country
folk come trooping to prayers.
