Dying, by slow degrees, into the deep, Delicious night. The final triumph of the perfect year,

Rises the woods' magnificent aray:
bond, the purple mountain heights appear,
And slope away. The elm, with musical, slow motion leaves.
His long, lithe branches in the tender air, hile from his top the gay Sordello waves.
Her scarlet hair.

Where spring first hid her violets, neath the The adorous, wild, red rose's heart-now burn The leaves of gold.

The loftiest hill, the lowliest flowering herb, The fairest fruit of season and of clime; All wear alike the mood of the superb Automnal time.

Now Nature pours her last and noblest wine; Like some Bacchante beside the singing Reclines the enchanted Day, rapt in divine, Impassioned dreams.

But where the painted leaves are falling fast, Among the vales, beyond the farthest hill, There sits a shadow, dim and sad and vast, And lingers still.

And still we hear a voice among the hills, A voice that mourns among the haunted And the dense mystery of its sorrow fills The solitudes.

For while gay Autumn gilds the fruit and leaf, And doth her fairest festal garments were, Lo! Time, all noiseless, in his mighty sheaf Binds up the year,—

The mighty sheaf which never is unbound;
The reaper whom our souls beseech in vain;
The loved, lost years that never may be found Or loved again.

'TWAS COMING FROM THE VILLAGE CHURCH.

BY DHARLES SWAIN.

'Twas coming from the Village Church I saw my false love nigh, I said-Oh! shame me not, my heart, But let me pass him by. And so the color left my cheek, And the tear forsook my eye; And with a timid step, and weak,

I pass'd my false love by. He looked-and thought, perchance, to see The blush and tear of old; But I was cold as he could be-That is, I seemed as cold! For fast and fast my heart did fill, Mine eyes could hold no more, -He might have seen I loved him still,

Had I not gained the door.

I hurried to my own-dear room I knelt me down to pray, But still no firmness could assume, My tears they would have way: Oh! base, unmanly aim-To seek for years to win a heart, Then make its love—its shame!

THE WORKING MAN.

The noblest men I know on earth Are men whose hands are brown with toil Who backed by no ancestral graves, Hew down the wood, and till the soil: And win thereby a prouder name Than follows king or warrior's fame.

The working men whate'er their task. Who carve the stone, or bear the hod, They bear upon their honest brows The royal stamp and seal of God; And worthier are their drops of sweat Than diamonds in a coronet

God bless the noble working men, Who rear the cities of the plain, Who dig the mines, who build the ships And drive the commerce of the main; God bless them; for their toiling hands Have wrought the glory of all lands.

A COOL PASSENGER.

Some years ago, before the secession war, business calling me to New Orleans, I found myself, one evening, steaming down the Missisippi,

The night was raw and unpleasant, and not having much to do, most of the passengers betook themselves to card playing.
The boat being much crowded, all the tables, etc., were soon seized upon; and although everything available was pressed into the service, quite a number were obliged to wait until others had become tired.

One I observed, however, who seemed determined to find a place somewhere. Their attention was at length attracted to the plethoric form of apparently a Methodist clergy man, who, extended upon several chairs, was peacefully slumbering. Quietly drawing up a stool on either side of him, they went to work. The game was single handed euchre, and as the points were scored with chalk npon the sleeper's sack it soon presented a variegated ap-

Notwithstanding the game was noisily conducted, the old gentleman slept quietly on, until one of the players becoming excited in some dispute which had arisen about the game, and forgetting the vitality of the card table, in adding emphasis to a proposition which he had laid down, brought down his clenched fist with considerable force immediately upon the pit of the old gentleman's stomach. A rumbling, cavernous sound followed, and the startled sleeper slowly assumed an upripht position violently struggling the while to recover the modicum of air so rudely expelled.

Almost choking with laughrer I awaited the denoument of the scene. Slowly surveying first one player and then carefully scrutinizing his hieroglyphically adorned coat, he at length coolly said, much to our disappointment, as we were waiting for some violent outbreak, "Gentlemen, if you have got through with this coat, I have train was blown two miles through a pneuanother under it which is perfectly at your matic tube in about five minutes. EXTRAORDINARY ACHIEVE-MENT.

One of the most extraordinary achievements in the hunting line has recently he has secured the services of first-class workmen of all who may favour him with their patronage. to the days of Nimrod, the mighty hunter, before guupowder, rifles, or projectiles be-came known. On Thursday last, Wm. B. spied a splendid buck about one hundred feet distant, on the edge of the woods. To throw down his reins and make for the deer was his first impulse, and the animal not relishing close acquaintance, made off at that pace for which deer are famous. In the neighbourhood was a creek not large in size, nor containing much water but into it as a harbor of refuge the poor buck sprung. Young Gordon fled on foot, fierce with the idea of capturing such a splendid specimen, and forgetting that he was without any weapon but his own vigorous arms, sprung upon the back of the deer, bore him down and yelled for help. A young brother hearing his cries rushed to the spot, and the deer was almost carried unbarmed to a large barn, where his antics in the efforts to escape rather astonished the neighbourhood. A sister of Master Gordon's having gone into the barn for the purpose of coaxing the animal to quietness, he made one spring and jumped clean over her head without injuring her in the least. The young men were obliged to remove the deer finally to a smaller house, but he became so uncontrollable that late at night they were obliged unwillingly to open a vein and reduce him to venison. This "ower true tale" is astonishing indeed, but it is nevertheless true to the letter. - Ottawa Union.

AGE OF THE PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT.

Mahmud Bey, astronomer to the Viceroy of Egypt, has published an interesting treatise, with the view of proving their dates from their connection with Sirius, the Dog-star. The late Viceroy, Said Pasha, ordered him to work out his problem. He found the exact measurement of the largest to be 231 metres at the base, and 146.40 from the ground to the apex. Hence it follows that the sides are at an angle of forty-one degrees and forty-five seconds. Mahmud Pasha found that the angle's of the other three pyramids, near Memphis were on an average inclination of fifty-two degrees. The fact that the sides of these monuments are placed exactly true to the four quarters of the globe, seemed to point to some connection with the stars, and Mahmud Bey found Sirius send his rays nearly vertically upon the south side, when passing the meridian of Ghizeb. He then found on calculating back, the exact positions the stars occupied in past centuries that the rays of Sirius were exactly vertical to the Great Pyramid 3,300 years B. C. Sirius was dedicated to the God Sothis, or Toth Anubis; and hence the astronomer deduces that the Pyramids were built about 3,300 B. C .- a date nearly coinciding with Bunsen's calculation, who fixes the reign of Cheops at thirty-four centuries before Christ .- London Builder.
