THE CONVICTION OF O'DONOVAN. - It has been hinted that the severity of the sentence in the case of O'Donovan (Rosa) one of the Fenian prisoners at Dublin, was a bit of retaliation indulged in by Judge Ke gh for the sinsults which the prisoner heaped upon the court. It was not so. The explanation and justification of the sentence are contained in the words in which it was pronounced. Mr. Justice Keogh said :- "Jeremish O'Donovan (Rosa), you have been after a patient CELEBRATED FEMALE PILLS trial, foun! guilty. You have been convicted twice on the same offence. The more we have contrasted your guilt with that of the other conspirators, the more have we been obliged to a rive at the conclusion that you have entertained the criminal design long anterior to 1859. (Prisoner here said: I was an Irishman since I was born.) Judge Keogh said he would not waste words in endeavoring to bring any sense of the crime of which he had been guilty to his mind.
(Prisone:—It would be useless to try.)—
Judge Keogh added: A man who has experienced the elemency of the crown, and who immediately violates his g od faith, shall not again have the opportunity of entering into any treasonable practices. We have no discreti in left but to pass upon you the sentence that you be kept in penal serviouer:-All right, my lord!)

SUDDEN DEATH IN A BALL-ROOM.

ing the progress of a ball. A young man named Charles Windeck was dameing a schottishe with a lady, and having made one circle of the half his partner noticed something extraordinary in his appearance. She advised him to sit down for a insment, but he object d, stating that the weakness was only momentary, and that he would feel better by continuing the dance. Scarcely, had they resumed the round when the unfortunate young man staggered forward and fell senseless to the floor in a swoon. A death-like pallor overspread his countenance, and a rush was made to his assistance. He was taken up and removed to a set ee, when he give a convulsive shudler and all was over, the grim monster waose harvest is raped at all seasons having claimed him as his own. Three inquisitive young men had a narrow escape from starvation in the new Court House at Ste. Scholastique last week .-They penetrated into one of the fire-proof vaults, and in the course of their explorations pulled the door to on themselves in such a way that they could not get out again. The Court House is at some distance from the village and uninhabited, and therefore, though they shouted and velled at the top of their voices, no one heard thema long interval expiring ere a person passed by and rescued them. In this same Court No Traveller should be without a supply of a lew years ago a dreadful scene transpired. The jail took fire and two women prisoners were burned to death. Ere the roof fell in upon them they clambered up to the barred windows, and in that fearful situation, with the smoke and fire whirling around them, confessed to the cure, who mounted to the wall on a ladder, and in that
