Norah listened as one who was but partially giving heed to what was told her. The realization of her cruel desertion by Malvrin, whom she had adored and trusted, was crushing her as a heavy calamity alone can crush the heart. He no longer loved her; another filled her place in his affections, and he had sanctioned her death that he might be free to wed her for whom she was deserted. to wed her for whom she was deserted.

This bitter knowledge filled her soul to the exclusion of all else. Her life hopes were gone; she had thought she was leaning on a pillar and it had turned out a reed. Need Norah gazed at him full of consternation and alarm, then she burst into tears, and great choking sobs shook her frame. Terry put his arm tenderly round her, and did his best to soothe and comfort her bursting heart. He vowed to be her protector and defender, and undertook to see that her rights and the rights of her child, should be guarded.

So Norah wept mare calmly, and laying her head on Terry's shoulder, told him all the story of her love and betrayal, and her secluded residence at the ruined castle among the mountains under the charge of

I intend to remain some months in the neighbourhood, and any service I may be able to render will be gladly given.

This proposition was eagerly acquiesced in both by Norah and her brother, and they resolved to proceed to the ruin that same evening after dark. It was now morning. though of course no ray of light penetrated to the cavern, and it was irksome enough to remain for so many hours in the dingy torch light, when the glory of a summer day was spread over land and sea.

Hargreave passed most of the time in making inquiries about Dundarra.
