and that's why you've come—to have a bit of triumph over my misfortune. But though I've lost my gold, Mister O'Brady, I havn't lost my fist, and if you don't take through the door immediately ye'll find yourself sprawling on the floor."

The factor retreated a step or two and cried "Larry," when immediately in stepped a functionary of the law, whom Michael and Terry knew only too well, for he had officiated at their ejectment from Mountjoy.

'It is likely you are to be wanted here, Larry,' said O'Brady. 'This young blade wouldn't care to show off some of his Califorcian airs.'

'He'd better be quiet and civil if he doesn't want to make the acquaintance of the inside of our Cork jail,' said Larry, knitting his heavy brows and looking awful.

'Och, that's the way of it? said Terry in a tone of disgust. 'Well the sconer he and you get out of here the better for us three, for I'll not be after standing any nonsense.'

'Sure it's no nonsense that brought us,' observed Larry.

'I should think not,' chimed in O'Brady;
'I only want what ould Michael owes me, and if I get it I'll walk out this blessed min-

'Then you'll not get it,' roared Terry. 'Och, then, its much about the same thing, for I'll take it,' said the factor care-

'Take it,' repeated Terry, 'ye'll be mighty clever if you do that.' Till try. Do you think I'll make the sum out of that purty new furniture, Larry?'

'Och, murder,' groaned Michael. 'Another turn-out. We must go back to the ould cabin, but ye can't take the furniture, Misther O'Brady, for sure its not mine—its Terry's.

'No it isn't,' quickly rejoined O'Brady.
'Terry bought it in your name, and the receipts were given in your name, and this house was taken in your name, so I'm all right and if ye don't mean to pay, Larry will take an inventory.

Its no use holdin out father, said Terry, in a tone of sad, yet fierce bitterness. 'He means to ruin us again, and he has got the law to help him.'

'Maybe ye should have minded that had the power to do so, when you boasted and bragged and insulted me the other day. I thought you would have known by this time that I don't suffer any one to insult me with impunity.'

'I know know you for the greatest blackguard in Ireland,' said Terry.
'You hear that, Larry?' said the factor. Don't forget that you heard him say so, and now you begin the inventory-there's a purty mahogany table, to start off with.'

'Stay,' cried an authoritative voice, and

The alarming increase in the cattle plague Britain, and the late bad weather, render dust.

And as Jacob O'Brady said this, there was a meering smile added to his ironical to ne. If I had ten times the sum you say, you should not finger a farthing of it; but of course you've heard that I've lost my boxes, and that's why you've come—to have a bit of triumph over my misfortune. But though I've lost my gold, Mister O'Brady, I havn't lost my gold, my gold my grain probable. "High, very high prices," says the London correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, "are certain to rule in this market during the forthcoming year." From prepare for a large share of the supply. The lost my gold, my gold my nteresiing to merchant and farmer:-

"The cattle murrain advances with such rapid strides, that 1,000 head per day is being sacrificed, which, at the rate of 9d per lb, takes away daily the animal food of half lb, takes away daily the animal food of hall a million of people; not, perhaps, at present, but certainly in prospect. Fear and good prices will necessarily keep markets well supplied as long as possible; but the result is plain enough to thinking people, that the utmost skill, together with a favoring Providence, is most desirable. As to present stocks of wheat in London, Horne & Co., in their annual circular, make them somewhat less than last year; and we put them down less than last year; and we put them down at 359,000 qrs.; for London alone we have less than six weeks' consumption; while, as London happens to be the largest emporium in the world just now, what becomes of this stock if a large country or foreign de-mand should set in? The former is certain, and the latter just possible, from the dimin-ished growth of corn all over the world."

A NEW BUSINESS.

ty to operate very largely in getting out peat during the ensuing Spring and Summer, and there is reason to believe that the different companies will reap a rich reward. One company, composed of three Canadians, have purchased 1,600 acres in the Cianber-Preparations are making in Welland Counry Marsh, and one of the partners has recently returned from Europe with the most improved machinery for geiting out, and preparing the peat for market, and his head full of the most valuable information bearing on the subject. This firm has refused $10,000 for their bargain. Besides the above, there are are two or three American companies preparing to operate very extensively. The effect on the price of the land has been very great. It is not yet twenty years since 50 cents would buy an acre any place in the marsh, then the price advanced to $3, subsequently to $7, and now, we believe, the prevailing rate is $10 per acre. Now purchasers are becoming numerous, but when the price was 50 cents it was hard to see a man who was willing to pay the amount. Indeed, some persons have been known to refuse the land as a gift. If peat turns out a good speculation and oil is struck, it is probable that thousands, will be required where hundreds will now answer.-St. Cath. Jour.
