thought of trying to make her escape. He had left the door open, and she might grope her way out from the cave uncheserved. She mae at once, and wrapping the shawl closely round her, orept to the top of the flight of steps, and gazed on the group in the half beneath. The cloud of steam still rose in a dense column from the val, and the swirthy, savage-looking men were congregated round it, some bending over the side and watching its contents, and others attending to tessels placed all round, into which from hipe conductors, the clear potheen was trickling and dropping.

Mary could not see Thady among these, norther tail, dark woman; but as this chance was her only hope, she did not hesitate in the attempt to escape, and began at once to descend the steps.

I wither the light from the chamber above, routher which hung above the vat in the half, fluminated the winding stair; she had therefore to grope her way in darkness. She had reached nearly to the bottom, when, instead of placing her foot on the next step, as she expected, it came upon a soft substance, which suddenly moved, when Mary feet her equilibrium and forward—into the arms of Thady.

I flere I am, my darlint, said the latter with a chuckle. I'm mighty proud to see you grown so fond uv me. If I had known ye were comin' in search of me, I would have saved ye the throuble, and attended ye in the chamber. Sure I'll be more particular another time. Give me your pardon with a kiss.'

'Forbeir, sir P cried Mary, half-crying with vexation and disappointment, and pushing away the fellow's face from hers. 'You well know why I am here. I was trying to make my escape from your detested pre-

Good-bye,' said Mary, struggling to be free.

Och, murder, but that's cutting me short intitely, said Thady with a laugh. We'll go back to the chamber, and come to an understanding wid each other.

And the ruffian, without releasing her, as ended the steps, ontered the chamber, and placed her again on the crimson couch.

'Sure, now,' he observed, 'aren't ye safer here than on the mountain path, where the the two boys that's followin' ye will be sure to get hould ov ye. Didn't I hear them say that we were runnin' from them?'

Be jabers, and I will.

Then give me my liberty, for I ask that,

Will you dare to go back in your promise? asked Mary as she stepped towards

"I demand my liberty," cried Mary, drawing herself, up and boldly and scornfully confronting him. My dress and my pre-thought I could swallow anything that came out of those purty lips, but that mouthful choices me, and won't go down at all, at all.

'Thady, Thady,' shouted a stentorian voice from below. 'The pothecen is begin-make bould to lock the door, and put the key in my pocket. Sure and its sorry I am that this is the drawing night, for I may be kept late, but you may depend on my coming back as command can, and thin you and I will be better acquainted. Och, its meself that wishes for my own return. And with a wink, which was loathsomely expressive. Thady quitted the chamber, locking the door as he had said.

Mary threw herself on the couch in a state of distraction. Her bosom was filled with horror and despair. The fate which threatened was dreadful beyond conception, and there was no way to escape. Her burning brain was in a very whirl of horror. Reason itself seemed on the very verge of dethroneitself seemed on the very verge of dethrone-

Hour after hour passed, and, as it grew late, shouts of mirth and revelry reached her from the hall below, and the fumes of the strong drink floated into the chamber.

We shall for a little leave the poor girl ther in shuddering agony, and see what is going forward in the large chamber from going forward in the large chamber from safe and secret cave in the mountains, a body of men, of whom Thady was head, carried on to a considerable extent a system of illicit distillation. Rough, rude men they were, as befitted their place and occupation. They were not slow to patronize their own manufacture, and "drawing night" was with them a night of wild revelry and dis-

It was now being enjoyed with all its noisy extravogance. The work was over, the lique was deposited in casks, and the drunken carnival which followed this operation was going forward. Songs were bois-terously sung, accompanied by a still more boisterous chorus, and toasts were drunk with violently enthusiastic demonstrations.

Irishmen are naturally excitable, and when under the influence of alchohol, they seem to be mad altogether.

Hoorth, boys! shouted Paddy Doyle, the first partial of the padding glass and the padding should be strictly confined and guarded till the month was expired, when her answer year or nay to her marriage with Malwrian would be demanded.

The days passed on, and still there were notidings of Hargreave; neither was there the pretty colleen, Thady's prize, that's waitin for him in the chamber above. May she live for ever and Thady along wid the dark shadow of an awful life sacrifice.

B. R. Kimball, any news of Terry and Andrew.

The hope of Mary's heart grew fainter and fainter, and there came stealing over it the dark shadow of an awful life sacrifice.

This loast was received with vociferations similar to those which created the last: but on the face of Kathleen there came a scoraful scowl, which deepened and deepened till her countenauce became fiendish in its expression. Then the scowl changed into a cold, contemptate smile, and, slowly rising, she glided along the back of the vats, and with footsteps as noiseless as that of a cat, ascended the winding stair which led to the room where Mary was confined.

The key of the door was in the lock outside. She had, therefore, but to turn it and enter. The slight noise caused Mary to spring from the souch, and she was standing in an attitude of horror and dread when Kathleen appeared.

The woman approached, with a finger on her lip to impose silence.

'Hush,' she whispered. 'If you wish to escape, follow me, but speak not a word, and make no noise.'

She turned and Mary followed her. At the top of the stair, where all was darkness, Kathleen took her hand and guided her down. The drinkers in the hall were as noisy as ever, and some were lying on the floor overpowered by the drink they had imbibed.

Having reached the bottom of the steps, Mary was led by her conductor behind the List of Prices, Weights, and Sizes of Farm, Hotel, Steamboat, School-house, Shop, and Factory Bell.

List of Academy, Steambaat, Fire-alarm & Church Bells, with particulars as to to Weight, Price of Bells. & Hangings

Having reached the bottom of the steps, Mary was led by her conductor behind the row of vats towards the passage along which Thady had carried her. No one observed them, and their course was unimpeded. They reached the small circular cave, and Kathleen, stooping down at the aperture, drew aside the trailing plants, and passed out. Mary quickly followed; and they stood in the recess among the rocks, with the fresh night air blowing in upon them.

COh, how can I thank you for your kindness in enabling me to escape? whispered Mary, as she warmly pressed Kathleen's hand.

But the latter snatched her hand quickly awny, and hastily said—

'I want no thanks. I am entitled to none.

What I have done was on my own behalf—not to serve you. But you are not yet safe from those in the cave. Come. given by returning the broken one.

'That is true,' replied Mary; 'but you have no right to detain me. I am bound on a mission of the utmost importance. The life of one dear to me, and my only earthly haptaess, depends on my reaching the place to which I am bound.'

'Arrah, now, can't ye be happy wid me?' said. Thady, with an insinuating smile.

'Sure I'll give you everything ye could wish, and nobody, barrin' me, will dar to say yes, if ye tell them to say no.'

'That is a genuine promise,' said Mary, looking him full in the face.

'I'll take my oath uv it,' answered Thady in great delignt, for he thought she was coming round to his wishes.

'Mor that way. My path lies up the mountain,' said Mary, as Kathleen turned down the slope.

'This way, girl,' said Kathleen sternly; and seizing her firmly by the arm, she led her form dozen yards to where a ledge of rock jutted out upon the road.

These Pills should not be taken by females in the recess. Her motive in liberating Mary, was now sufficiently manifest. I Mary, was now sufficiently manifest. It was indeed to serve herself, to preserve her position with Thady, and to prevent the introduction of a rival and her own degradation. Having heard the conversation of Malvin and allke in the recess, she knew that they were in pursuit of Mary, and she concluded that the surest way of getting her separated from Thady was to put her into the hands of those who were seeking for her. She therefore left the cave by another outlet, and taking a secret wath among the hills.

The heart of the poor girl sunk within her. Her long journey was fruitless. She was once more in the power of Malvrin, and her fate was sealed.

Well, Miss Kendal, said Malvrin, we have overtaken you at last, but you have led us a wild journey.

Here they had refreshment, and mounted their horses. Malvrin supported Mary on the saddle before him, and in a few hours they arrived at Kendal Gastle.

We need not describe the meeting between father and daughter—the sterness of the one and the coldness of the other. Suffice it to say that Mary was again made prisener in her own room, and was told that she should be strictly confined and guarded till the month was expired, when her aus-
