The eleverness of the French and Eng-lish thieves is often spoken of, but the desert are quite their equals, as is proven by the following fac's.

And why not? and who knows but that their horses are rejoicing as well; who can prove the contrary? But their owners rejoice because of the atomishing and almost miraculous effects of the former of "Darley's Arabian Heave Remady". Some well and who knows but that their

the victim is a stranger, or belongs to another tribe, which is almost synonymous with an enemy.

A Bedouin named Jabal, possessing a much renowned mare, heard that a person named Gafar had boasted of being cunning enough to steal her from him. He kept himself on his guard, fastening his mare every night with a chain affixed to the fetluck of one of her bind legs, and then passing through the canvass of his tent, the other end was attached to a stake firmly driven in the ground, under the hon-skin which served for a bed for himself and

But Gafar, one night, managed to introduce himself into the tent, and slipping in between Jabal and his wife, and pushe ing gently, first against one and then the other, he managed to induce the sleeping spouses to searate to the right and lett, each supposing that the pressure came from the other. This done Cafar cut through the skin with a sharp knife, pulted up the stake, detached the mare and sprang npon her back. But, before going, he seized the lance of Jabal, and striking him with the wooden end, he cried:

"I am Gafar! I have s'olen your mare, and I give you timely waring."

It may be remarked here that this warnting was in conformily with the cu-toms of the desert on similar occasions; from a moment when a thieft, under the proper circumstances, is considered an honorable act, he who executes it naturally seeks to obtain all the glory that might attach to such an exploit Awakening with a spring, the poor Jabal rushed out of his tent and gave the alarm; then springing upon his prother's mare, he started, with a few Arabs of his tribe, in pursuit of the robber. The brother's mare was of the same breed as Jabal's, without, however, being her equal. It is quite evident therefore that an article hav-However, after a four hours' chase she ing the virtues of the pure Jamaica Sarasparilla had outstripped all the others (the Bed- in the fullest degree is required; while at the had outstripped all the others (the Bed-

VILLAINOUS CASE OF ABDOUTION.

On Friday afternoon an interesting young girl of some fourteen or fifteen summers, named Margret Fisher, arrived in this city from Bowmanville in search of employment having been sent hither by her uncle. Being a stranger, and having- no friends in Toronto, she wondered about for some hours after her arrival, doubtless lamenting her lonely position, she being an orphan. wards evening she deemed it adviseable to secure a lodging, and inquired of a colored woman for some place in which to sleep that evening. She was informed by the colored woman that she knew of no place where she could be accommodated; but referred her interrogator to a man-whose name we have not yet learned, but trust to be ab'e to ascertain it in order that he may get the benetit of publicity-for information. This black-hearted seamp at once replied that he would take great p'easure in conducting the innocent and unsuspecting girl to a house where she would be well cared for ; and then in the most beautless manner conveyed her to a house of ill repute on Centre street, kept by a French woman named Harriet Griffio. At a late hour at night the mistress of the establishment tried to prevail upon her lodger to occupy the same room with a male visitor, against which arrangement she stoutly and indignantly protested. A colored by wast en, it seems, ordere lor allowed to abuse her, but notwithstanding the ill usage the poor orphan girl received at the hands of those who should have protected her she succeeded in saving herself from disgrace, and on Saturday morning informed a gentleman who was pa-sing the house of her forlorn condition. This kind-hearted and honorable man immediately proceeded to No. 2 police station and informed sergeant Dunlop of the circumstances. The officer at ouce took steps to rescue the young girl from the infamous established to which she had been brought, and also arrested the proprietress and the other occupants and lodged them in the police station. They will all appear at the police court to-day for examination, when it is to be hoped that those who endeavored to lead the poor girl a life of sin and shame will be made to suffer for their conduct .- Leader.

OWNERS OF HORSES REJOICING.

We must premise that, in the moral code of the desert, the theft of a horse is venously, yet derive no benefit from it; some considered a very honorable exploit, if were hide bound with rough and shaggy hair; were hide bound with rough and shaggy hair; others had severe cold and coughs; many had the heaves and other complaints peculiar to horses: on all it operated as a charm, the disease or complaint was speedily removed, the appetite and digestive organs corrected—the skin softened, and a sleek and shining appearance given to the coat all without any danger to, or preventing the horse being used.
